3. "This word, which seems to have no relation to the Dut. schoon, fine, fair, neat, may probably have been formed from the A. S. scunian, to flee, to shun. The vessel called schooner is swift, light, and consequently adapted for flight in circumstances where its weakness would unfit it for resistance." Jal. — "The first vessel of the kind is said to have been built at Gloucester, Mass., by Capt. Andrew Robinson, about the year 1711. The name was given to it from the following circumstance: Capt. R. had constructed a vessel, which he masted and rigged in the manner that schooners now are, and on her going off the stocks into the water, a bystander cried out, 'O, how she schoons!' R. instantly replied, 'A schooner let her be'; and from that time this class of vessels has gone by that name. Previously, vessels of this description were unknown either in this country or Europe." Essex Memorial, 1-38.

See MORAL. — Natural science, the knowledge of causes and effects, and of the laws of nature. Brand. — The natural sciences, the sciences which treat of the three kingdoms of nature; the animal, the vegetable, and the mineral. Baird. — Physical science. See PHYSICAL. — Pure science, knowledge based on self-evident truths, as the mathematics. Davies. — The seven sciences of antiquity, grammar, rhetoric, logic, arithmetic, music, geometry, and astronomy. Pope.

Syn. — The distinction between science and art is, that science is a body of principles and deductions, to explain the nature of some matter. An art is a body of precepts with practical skill for the completion of some work. A science teaches us to know; an art, to do. In art, truth is a means to an end; in science, it is the only end. Hence the practical arts are not to be classed among the sciences. Whewell.

"It is a part of grammatical science to say, that all words with a certain termination have a certain accent. When this is converted into a rule, it becomes part of an art." Lewis.

"Science and art may be said to be investigations of truth; but one, science, inquires for the sake of knowledge, the other, art, for the sake of production; and hence science is more concerned with the higher truths, art with the lower; and science never is engaged, as art is, in productive application." Karslake.

"Science is the result of general laws, and is sometimes called theory, as correlative with art." Davies.

SCÄR'RHUS (skär'rhūs) [skär'rhūs, S. W. Ja. K. Sm.], n.; pl. scär'rhūs; Eng. scär'rhūs; Gr. σκιρρος; It. scirro; Sp. scirro; Fr. squirrhe.] (Med.) Induration of a peculiar kind, generally affecting glandular structures, but occurring in other textures. Dunglison.

"This word is sometimes, but improperly, written scirrus, with the s in the first syllable instead of the ä; and Bailey and Fenning have given us two aspirations, and spelt it schirrus; both of which modes of spelling the word are contrary to the general analogy of orthography: for, as the word comes from the Greek σκιρρος, the latter r only can have the aspiration, as the first of these double letters has always the spiritus lenis; and the c in the first syllable arising from the Greek κ, and not the χ, no more reason can be given for placing the ä after it, by spelling it schirrus, than there is for spelling scene, from σκηνη, schene, or scripture, from σκηπτω, schep-tre. The most correct Latin orthography confirms this opinion, by spelling the word in question scirrhous; and according to the most settled analogy of our own language, and the constant method of pronouncing words from the Greek and Latin, the c ought to be soft before the i in this word, and the first syllable should be pronounced like the first of syr-inge, Sir-i-n, &c. Whatever might have been the occasion of the false orthography of this word, its false pronunciation seems fixed beyond recovery." Walker.

† SCIS-CI-TÁ'TION, n. [L. sciscitatio.] The act of inquiring; inquiry. Bp. Hall.

SCIS'SEL (sis'sel), n. 1. The clippings of metals produced in manufacturing them. Brande.

Why should not they be as well victualled, for so long a time, as the ships are victualled for a year?

SEEK, v. a. [Goth. sokjan; A. S. secan; Frs. seka; Dut. zoeken; Ger. suchen; Dan. sige; Sw. sika; Icel. sækia.—Wachter, with prefixing s, derives it from the Ger. auge, ook, och, the eye,—the first investigation being made by the eye. Adelung agrees with Wachter, finding Ger. suchen, to seek, related to Ger. sehen, to see; but as these words denote also tending towards, approaching, seeking, they may be from the Heb. לָקַח, to run about, to run to and fro, also the leg by which the body is moved forward, or a street where men walk to seek what they have in view. Bosworth.] [z. SOUGHT; pp. SEEKING, SOUGHT.]

1. To look for or after; to search for; to go to find; to try to find;—often with out, or after.

I sought thee in a secret cave,

He did range the town to seek me out.

To seek after, some better reason.

2. To solicit; to endeavor to gain; to ask.

And others, tempting him, sought of him a sign from heaven.

—See SEARCH.

SEEK, v. n. 1. To make search or inquiry.

Seek ye out of the book of the Lord, and read. Isa. xxxiv. 16.

2. To endeavor; to strive; to try.

Why should he mean he will or seek to harm?

† To seek, under the necessity of seeking or searching; without knowledge or experience.

Unpractised, unprepared, and still to seek.

—To seek after, to try to find or to take; to make pursuit after. "Violent men have sought after my soul." Ps. lxxxvi. 14.—To seek for, to search for; to try to find. Knolles.—† To seek to, to seek.

And Wisdom's self
Oft seeks to sweet, retired solitude.

And in that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek.

SEEK'ER, n. 1. One who seeks; an inquirer.

Cato is represented as a seeker to oracles.

2. (Ecc. Hist.) One of a sect which professed to have no determinate form of religion, but to be in search of one.

SEEK'ING, n. The act of one who seeks.

SEEM, v. n. [A. S. seman, to appear, to seem; Ger. ziemen, to become; scheinen, to appear, to seem; Dan. synes; Sw. synas.—L. simulo, to make like; similis, like; i. sembrare; Sp. semblar; Fr. sembler.] [i. SEEMED; pp. SEEMING, SEEMED.] To appear; to make a show; to have semblance; to present the appearance.

So spoke the Omnipotent and with his words
All seemed well pleased—all seemed, but were not all.

It seems, it appears; it has the appearance of truth; it is so stated;—used in slight affirmation. "He had been a chief magistrate, and had, it seems, executed that high office justly and honorably."

Syn.—To appear is a stronger term than to seem. The sun appears above the horizon, and seems to move. A thing seems plausible, and appears to be true. To a common observer the heavenly bodies seem to move round the earth; but to a man of science it will clearly appear that it is the earth that moves, and not the sun or the stars. He looks well, appears healthy, and seems contented.

† SEEM, v. a. To become; to befit; to beseeem. "Honest mirth that seemed her well." Spenser.

SEEM'ER, n. One who seems.

SEEM'ING, n. 1. Appearance; show; semblance.

2. Fair or goodly appearance.

For you there's rosemary and rue; these keep Seeming and savor all the winter long.

3. † Opinion; judgment; estimate.

His persuasive words, impregn'd
With reason, to her seeming, and with truth.

SEEM'ING, p. a. Appearing; making a show or semblance; apparent.

Syn.—See APPARENT.

SEEM'ING-LY, ad. Apparently; in appearance.

SEEM'ING-NESS, n. Plausibility; appearance; semblance; show.

† SEEM'LI-LY, ad. Decently; comely. Hulot.

SEEM'LI-NESS, n. The quality of being seemly; decency; comeliness; beauty.

SEEM'LY, a. Beeseming; befitting; decent; becoming; proper; suitable; appropriate; fit; meet. "To make a seemly answer."

Suspense of judgment and exercise of charity were safer and seemlier for Christian men than the hot pursuit of these controversies.

SEEM'LY, ad. In a decent or proper manner.

† SEEM'LY-HED, n. Decent or comely appearance.

SEEN, p. from see. Beheld; perceived. — See SEE.

† SEAR'WOOD (-wäd), }

SEES'AW, v. n. [Perhaps saw-saw, a reduplication of saw, and intended to express the motion to and fro, backwards and forwards, in the act of sawing. Richardson.] [i. SEESAWED; pp. SEESAWING, SEESAWED.] To move or play with a reciprocating motion to and fro, or up and down.

Sometimes they were like to pull John over: then it went all of a sudden again on John's side; so they went seesawing up and down from one end of the room to the other. Arthur Knol.

SEES'AW, n. 1. A reciprocating motion. Pope.

2. A kind of play in which two children, seated one at each end of a board supported on a fulcrum, move alternately upwards and downwards:—the board, as used in this play.

3. (At Whist.) The playing of two partners, so that each, alternately, enables the other to win the trick.

SEES'AW, a. Undulating with reciprocal motion; moving to and fro, or up and down.

SEETH, v. a. [A. S. seothan; Dut. zieden; Ger. sieden; Dan. syde; Sw. sjuda; Icel. seyda, söda.—Gr. ζέω.] [i. SEETHED or † SON; pp. SEETHING, SEETHED or RODDEN.] To boil; to decoct in hot liquor. "Seethe the pottage." 2 Kings iv. 38.

The Scythians used to seethe the flesh in the hide, and so do the northern Irish.

SEETH'ER, n. To be in a state of ebullition; to be hot; to boil.

The boiling baths at Cairbedon,
Which seethe with secret fire eternally.

SEETH'ER, n. 1. One who seethes.

2. A boiler; a pot.

Dryden.

SE-FÄ'TIAN (se-fä'shan), n. [Arab. sefiit, qualification, attribute.] (Ecc. Hist.) One of a sect of Mohammedans, who hold the opposite opinion to the Motazelites, with respect to the eternal attributes of God.

SEG, n. Sedge; a rush. [Local, Eng.] Barret.

SEG'RE-GÄ'TION, n. [L. segregatio; Fr. ségrégation.] Separation from others.

Veins of segregation, silicious, calcareous, or other matters which have been simultaneously infiltrated from surrounding rocks into small cracks or cavities caused by a shrinking or contraction of the mass. Lyell.

SEID, n. A descendant of Mahomet.

SEID'LITZ-PÖW'DER, n. See SEDLITZ-POWDER.

SEID'LITZ-WÄ'TER, n. See SEDLITZ-WATER.

SEI-GNEÜ'RI-AL (se-nü're-äl), a. [Fr. seigneurial. — See SEIGNIOR.] Relating to a lord of the manor; manorial:—invested with large powers; independent.

Those lands were seigneurial.

SEIGN'IOR (sän'yur), n. [L. senior; senex, old; It. signore; Sp. señor; Fr. seigneur.] Among the feudists, a lord of the fee:—a title, in some European countries, equivalent to lord in England;—written also signior, and signor.

Most potent, grave, and reverend seigniors.

The sultan or emperor of Turkey is styled the Grand Seignior.

The most extended signification of this word includes not only a lord or peer of Parliament, but is applied to the owner of a thing; hence the owner of a hawk, and the master of a fishing-vessel, is called a seignior.

SEIGN'IOR-AGE (sän'yur-aj), n. [Fr. seigneurie. — See SEIGNIOR.] An ancient prerogative of the English crown, whereby it claimed a percentage upon every ingot of gold and silver brought to the mint to be coined:—in commercial law, the profit derived from issuing coins at a rate above their intrinsic value. Brande.

SEIGN-IÖR-I-ÄL (-yö'-), a. Seigniorial. Clarke.

SEIGN'IÖR-IZE (sēn'yūr-iz), v. a. To rule as a seignior; to lord over. [R.] Fairfax.

SEIGN'IÖR-Y (sēn'yūr-ē), n. [Fr. seigneurie.] The right or estate which a lord has in the land held by his tenant; a lordship; a manor.

All the land in England in the hands of any layman is held of some lord, to whom the holder or tenant owes some service. It is by doing this service that the tenant is entitled to hold the land. His duty is a service, and the right of the lord is a seignior. P. Cyc.

SEINE (sēn), n. [A. S. segne, a net. — Gr. σάγην; L. & It. sagina; Fr. seine.] A kind of large fishing-net.

The seine is a net of about forty fathoms in length, with which they encompass a part of the sea, and draw the same on land by two ropes fastened at its ends, together with such fish as lighteth within his precinct. Caveau.

SEINE'-BÖAT, n. A fishing-boat of about fifteen tons burden, — used in the fisheries on the west coast of England, to carry the large seine or casting-net. Simmonds.

SEINE'-FISH-ER, n. One who fishes with a seine; a seiner. Clarke.

SEIS'IN, or SEIZ'IN (sē'zin), n. [Law L. seisin; Law Fr. seisine; seiser (Fr. saisir), to seize.] Written seisin by Bailey, Martin, Brande, Whishaw, Bouvier, Burrill, &c.; — seizin by Johnson, Walker, Jameson, Smart, &c.

1. (Law.) Possession of land; possession of an estate of freehold in lands.

Seisin is properly applied to freehold; possession, to goods and chattels; although sometimes the one is used instead of the other. Seisin in fact, or in deed is actual possession of the freehold; seisin in law is a legal right to such possession, as where lands have descended to a party who has not entered into actual possession of them, or is by wrong disseized of them. In some of the United States, seisin means merely ownership; and the distinction between seisin in deed and in law is not known in practice. Burrill.

2. The act of taking possession.

Every indulged sin gives Satan livery and seisin of his heart. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

Livery of seisin. See LIVERY.

SEIS-MÖM'E-TER, n. [Gr. σεισμός, an earthquake; seio, to shake, and μέτρον, a measure.] An instrument for measuring the shock of an earthquake, and other concussions. Brande.

SEI'-TY, n. [L. se, one's self.] Something peculiar to one's self. [R.] Tatler.

SEIZ'A-BLE, a. That may be seized. Todd.

SEIZE (sēz), v. a. [Fr. saisir. — Low L. saisio, from L. sessio, sessio, a sitting, or the Gr. σάω, to strain. Menage. Du Gange. — Perhaps A. S. ceosan, to choose. Richardson. — "Till that death me cese, I will be hers." Chaucer.]

1. To take hold of suddenly and forcibly; to take possession of by force; to lay hold on; to gripe; to grasp.

The tiger now hath seized the gentle hind. Shak.

At last they seize the sceptre, and regard not David's sons. Milton.

And hope and doubt alternate seize her soul. Pope.

2. To take possession of by virtue of an execution or legal authority.

His whole estate [was] confiscated and seized, and his houses pulled down. Bacon.

3. To lay with a gripe; to fasten; to fix. [R.]

So down he fell before the cruel beast, Who on his neck his bloody claws did seize. Spenser.

4. (Naut.) To bind or fasten together, as any two ropes, or different parts of one rope, with a small line or cord. Mar. Dict.

Syn. — See GET.

To be seized of, to have possession of.

So Pluto, seized of Proserpine, conveyed To hell's tremendous gloom the alighted maid. Addison.

To seize on, or upon, to take possession of; to lay hold on.

Jezabel projects not to seize on Naboth's vineyard without a precedent charge. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

SEIZED (sēzd), p. a. (Law.) Having possession; being in possession. Blackstone.

SEIZ'ER (sēz'ēr), n. One who seizes. Todd.

SEIZ'IN (sē'zin), n. (Law.) See SEISIN. Hale.

SEIZ'ING, n. Act of one who seizes; seizure.

SEIZ'URE (sē'zhur), n. 1. The act of seizing.

Thy lands, and all things that thou dost call thine Worth seizure, do we seize into our hands. Shak.

2. Possession; gripe; grasp; hold. Make o'er thy honor by a deed of trust, And give me seizure of the mighty wealth. Dryden.

3. The thing seized. Milton.

4. (Law.) Act of taking possession by virtue of an execution or legal authority. Bouvier.

Syn. — See RAPTURE.

SE'JANT, } a. (Her.) Noting a beast sitting

SE'JE-ANT, } so as to have the fore legs straight and vertical. Crabb.

SE'L'A-DÖN-ITE, n. (Min.) A soft variety of pyroxene of different shades of green, and of an earthy or minutely crystalline appearance; — called also green-earth. Dana.

SE'LÄH, n. [Heb. סֵלָה.] A word occurring frequently in the book of Psalms.

Its meaning it is by no means easy to determine. The Septuagint translators and some commentators look upon it as a mere musical mark; whilst others, from the probable derivation of the word, consider it as synonymous with Hallelujah, and used therefore at the end of passages which the writer would point out as worthy of most attentive observation. Eden.

logical limitations whatever. There is nothing against the existence of a genuine form, self's, except the habit of the English not to use one, myself, or the little necessity for no

The primary signification of self seems to be that of an adjective. Johnson. — The evidence of the forms like myself, as well as other facts adducible from comparative philology, prove the substantial character of self. Latham.

Self, united to the personal pronouns my, thy, him, her, our, yours, them, and it, forms the class of reciprocal pronouns, or by some grammarians called compound personal pronouns, which are used in the nominative and objective cases when an action reverts upon the agent, and also when some persons are to be distinguished from others; as, "He hurt himself"; "He himself was present"; "They themselves were present."

Self is sometimes separated from its personal pronoun by an adjective; as, "His own self." When this occurs, the personal pronoun is always put in the possessive form.

Self is much used in composition.

Selfishness will show itself in as many different shapes as there are different dispositions in men. W. Hazell.

— "The undue love of self, with the postponing of the interests of all others to our own, had for a long time no word to express it in English. Help was sought from the Greek and from the Latin; 'Philauty' (φιλαντία) had been more than once attempted by our scholars, but found no acceptance. This failing, men turned to the Latin; one writer trying to supply the want by calling the man a 'suist,' as one seeking his own things (sua), and the sin itself 'suicism.' The gap, however, was not really filled up till some of the Puritan writers, drawing on our Saxon, devised 'selfish' and 'selfishness,' words which to us seem obvious enough, but which yet are not more than two hundred years old." Dean Trench.

Syn. — Self-love is not only a feeling, but a principle of action, and has happiness for its object. Selfishness is the pursuit of one's own gratification, without regard to, or in opposition to, the welfare of others. Selfishness is always used in a bad sense. Self-love is necessary to the existence of a rational being, and if unaccompanied by selfishness, is not blamable.

SEPT-TU-A-ĠINT, n. [L. septuaginta, seventy.] A version of the Hebrew Scriptures into Greek, otherwise called the Alexandrian version of the Old Testament. P. Cyc.

✠ The Septuagint is reported by Josephus to have been made by seventy-two elders at the command of Ptolemy Philadelphus. But this account is very doubtful, and is now generally rejected. Most critics imagine that the version of the Pentateuch was made during the reign of Ptolemy Soter, and between the years 298 and 335 B. C., for the benefit of the Jews whom Ptolemy had carried into Egypt (B. C., 320), and probably under the patronage of the king; and that the name Septuagint is derived from the circumstance of the version having been approved by the Sanhedrim of the Alexandrian Jews. It is evident from the style of the version of the remaining books of the Old Testament, that they were translated by different hands and at different times. That the translators of the Septuagint were Egyptians is evident from the Coptic words which occur in the version. It was used not only by the Hellenistic Jews, but by all Jews who understood Greek; and even some of the Talmudists mention it with praise. It is constantly quoted by Josephus, and very frequently by the writers of the New Testament. P. Cyc.

SEPT-TU-A-ĠINT, a. Belonging to the version of the Old Testament called the Septuagint. Ash.

Septuagint chronology, that formed from the dates and periods of time mentioned in the Septuagint translation of the Old Testament. It reckons 1500 years more from the creation to Abraham than the Hebrew Bible. Ency. Brit.

(Mil.) A sergeant appointed to guard the colors carried by an ensign. — Covering sergeant, a sergeant who, during the exercise of a battalion, stands or moves behind each officer commanding or acting with a platoon or a company. — Drill sergeant, a sergeant who, under the direction of a sergeant-major, instructs raw recruits in the principles of military exercise. — Lance sergeant, a corporal acting as a sergeant in a company. — Pay-sergeant, a sergeant employed to pay the men, and to account for all disbursements. — Quartermaster-sergeant, a sergeant acting under the quartermaster of a regiment. Stocqueler.

Sergeant-at-arms, in England, an officer whose duty it is to attend the person of the king, to arrest traitors or persons of quality offending, and to attend the lord-high-steward sitting in judgment on a traitor, &c. Cowell.

— In a legislative body, an officer who executes the commands of the house in apprehending delinquents or offenders, and in preserving order, &c. In the House of Lords, the sergent-at-arms attends upon the chancellor with the mace, and executes the orders of the house for the apprehension of delinquents. — A ministerial officer attending a court of chancery. Brande. Burrill. — Sergeant of the mace, in England, an officer who attends the lord mayor of London, or the chief magistrate of a corporate town. Burrill. — Sergeant-at-law, (Eng. Law.) a lawyer of the highest rank under a judge; — also called sergeant. Brande. — Sergeant-major, (Mil.) the chief non-commissioned officer in a regiment, who assists the adjutant, &c. Glos. of Mil. Terms. — White sergeant, a term of ridicule, in the British service, for a lady who interferes in military matters. Stocqueler.

There is a remarkable exception to the common sound of the letter e in the words clerk, sergeant, and a few others, where we find the e pronounced like the a in dark and margin. But this exception, I imagine, was, till within these few years, the general rule of sounding this letter before r, followed by another consonant. Thirty years ago, every one pronounced the first syllable of merchant like the monosyllable mark, and as it was originally written, marchant. Servant and servant are still heard, among the lower orders of speakers, as if written servance and servant; and even among the better sort, we sometimes have the salutation, "Sir, your servant;" though this pronunciation of the word singly would be looked upon as a mark of the lowest vulgarity. The proper names Derby and Berkley still retain the old sound; but even these, in polite usage, are getting into the common sound, nearly as if written Durby and Burkeley. As this modern pronunciation of the e has a tendency to simplify the language by lessening the number of exceptions, it ought certainly to be indulged." Walker.

The letters er are irregularly sounded ar in clerk and sergeant, and formerly, but not now, in merchant, Derby, and several other words." Smart.
 In the United States, the letters er are, by good speakers, regularly sounded, as in her, in the words merchant, servant, Derby, Berkley, &c. The regular pronunciation of clerk [clerk] is also a very common, if not the prevailing, mode. Many give the same sound to e in sergeant. — See CLERK, and MERCHANT.

SÈR'QEAN-TRY (sâr'-), n. Sergeanty. Johnson.

SÈR'QEAN-TY, or SÈR'JEANT-Y (sâr'jent-y or ser'jent-y), n. [Low L. serjantia.] (Eng. Law.) An honorary kind of feudal service due to the crown for lands held of it, and which is still retained. Burrill.

Grand sergeanty, a species of tenure whereby a tenant was bound, instead of serving the king generally in his wars, to do some special honorary service to the king in person, as to carry his banner, sword, &c. Burrill. — Petit sergeanty. See PETIT.

The lexicons generally, both ancient and modern, also assign to the word and its derivatives the farther office of a round or indefinite number, to express a small number, in the sense of several. . . . It appears to us possible to resolve all the other passages [in the Bible], referred to by Gesenius and others to this class, into the idea of sufficiency, satisfaction, fulness, completeness, perfection, abundance, &c., intimated in the Hebrew root from which the numeral is derived. . . . It is most likely that this idea became originally associated with the number seven from the Creator having finished all his work on the seventh day; and that hence, also, it was adopted as a sacred number, or a number chiefly employed in religious concerns, in order to remind mankind of the creation and its true author. Thus there were seven offerings in making a covenant (Gen. xxi. 28); seven lamps in the golden candlestick (Ex. xxvii. 23); the blood was sprinkled seven times (Lev. iv. 16, 18); every seventh year was sabbatical, seven sabbaths of years in the jubilee (xxv. 8); seven trumpets, seven lamps, seven seals, &c. We also find the number seven introduced into forms of superstition, &c. . . . It was considered a fortunate number among the Persians. Cicero calls it the knot and cement of all things. Kitts.

W.; sō'er, K.; sōr, vulgarly pronounced shōr, Sm.; sōr, C.] n. [Fr. suivre, to follow; issir, to issue. Richardson.] A passage to convey water under ground; a drain; — sometimes corrupted by orthography, as well as pronunciation, into shore.

Where houses thick and sewers annoy the air. Milton.

— "The corrupt pronunciation of this word is become universal, though in Junius's time it should seem to have been confined to London; for, under the word shore, he says, 'Common shore.' Londinensibus ita corrupte dicitur, the common sewer." Johnson has given us no etymology of this word; but Skinner tells us, "Non infelicitur Cornelius declinat a verbo issir, dictumque putat quasi issir, abjecta initiali syllaba." Nothing can be more natural than this derivation; the s going into sh before u, preceded by the accent, is agreeable to analogy, and the u in this case, being pronounced like eo, might easily draw the word into the common orthography, sewer; while the sound of sh was preserved, and the eo, as in show, strew, and sew, might soon slide into o, and thus produce the present anomaly." Walker.

SHĀK'EN (shā'kn), a. Shaky, as timber. Weale.

SHĀK'ER, n. 1. One who, or that which, shakes. "The shaker of the earth." Pope.

2. One of a religious denomination, styled "The United Society," that first rose in Lancashire, England, in 1747, but afterwards emigrated to the United States, — so called from a kind of dancing which they practise in their religious exercises. Evans. Brande.

The leader of the sect in England was Ann Lee, who emigrated to America with a few proselytes in 1774, and formed a settlement at Niakayuna, in the State of New York. There are several settlements or villages of Shakers in the U. S., the chief of which is at New Lebanon, in the State of New York. They lead a life of celibacy, and all property is held in common. Wright.

SHÁLE, n. [Corrupted from shell. — Ger. schale.] 1. A shell or husk, as of a nut. Gower.

2. (Min.) Indurated clay less fissile than schist, but splitting with tolerable facility in plates parallel to each other and to the original planes of bedding. Ansted.

SHÁLE, v. a. To shell or peel. Browne.

SHÁLL, v. [A. S. seal, I am obliged, I ought; Dut. zullen, to be obliged; zal, zül, shall; Ger. sollen, to be obliged; soll, shall; Dan. skulle, to be obliged; skal, shall; Sw. skola, to be obliged; skulle, shall; Icel. skal, I ought, I shall.] [i. SHOULD.] It is an auxiliary and defective verb, used to form the future tense. In the first person, it implies having intention or purpose to, or being in a state to; as, "I shall go"; "I shall die." In the second and third persons, it implies compulsion, command, promise, or threat; as, "You shall go"; "You shall die"; "They shall go"; "They shall die."

Shall and will, the two signs of the future tense in the English language, are often confounded with each other, especially by foreigners, and by persons not well versed in the language. A sad misapplication of these auxiliaries was made by the foreigner, in England, who, having fallen into the Thames, cried out, "I will be drowned, nobody shall help me." Shall, in the first person, simply foretells; as, "I shall speak"; — in the second and third persons, it commands, promises, or threatens; as, "You shall speak"; "He shall be rewarded"; "They shall be punished." Will, in the first person, promises or threatens; as, "I will do it"; — and, in the second and third persons, it simply foretells; as, "You, he, or they will do it."

The following remarks are quoted from Johnson: "The explanation of shall, which foreigners and provincials confound with will, is not easy; and the difficulty is increased by the poets, who sometimes give to shall an emphatical sense of will; but I shall endeavor, crassa Minerva, to show the meaning of shall in the future tense: 1. I shall love, it will be so that I must love; I am resolved to love. 2. Shall I love? Will it be permitted me to love? Will you permit me to love? Will it be that I must love? 3. Thou shalt love, I command thee to love; it is permitted thee to love; [in poetry or solemn diction.] It will be that thou must love. 4. Shall thou love? Will it be that thou must love? Will it be permitted to thee to love? 5. He shall love, it will be that he must love; it is commanded him that he love. 6. Shall he love? Is it permitted him to love? [in solemn language.] Will it be that he must love? 7. The plural persons follow the signification of the singulars."

"This verb is unquestionably a derivative from the Maxon seal, I owe or I ought, and was originally of the same import. I shall doubted, 'It is my duty,' and is precisely synonymous with debeo in Latin. Chaucer says, 'The faith I shall to God'; that is, 'The faith I owe to God.' 'Thou shalt not kill,' or 'Thou oughtest not to kill.' In this sense shall is a present tense, and denotes a present duty or obligation. But, as all duties and all commands, though present in respect to their obligation and authority, must be future in regard to their execution, so, by a natural transition observable in most languages, this word, significant of present duty, came to denote a future time. I have considered it, however, as a present tense, 1st, because it originally denoted present time; 2dly, because it still retains the form of the present, preserving thus the same analogy to should that can does to could, may to might, will to would; and, 3dly, because it is no singular thing to have a verb in the present tense, expressive of future time, commencing from the present moment, for such precisely is the Greek verb μέλλω, future sum. Nay, the verb will denotes present inclination, yet in some of its persons, like shall, expresses futurity. I have considered, therefore, the verb shall as a present tense, of which should is the preterperfect." Crombie.

"Shall or will implies present time referring to the future. Should or would implies past time referring to the future — that is, to time which is future in comparison with the past time. 'I shall or will teach' expresses a present disposition towards a future act; 'I should or would teach' expresses a predisposition towards a future act. In the former, the tendency towards the future is represented as originating now; in the latter, it is represented as originating in the past." Hunter.

Wallis's rule, as given in Brightland and Steele's Grammar, is as follows: —

In the first person simply shall foretells; in the second and third persons shall is used to denote compulsion, command, promise, or threat; and will is used to denote intention or purpose.

— See WILL.

In manerly apparel, with shamefastness. Tyndale's Trans., 1526.

"Shamefast, shamefastness, as steadfast, steadfastness. It is also found so written in old authors. The source of the change is obviously from the effect of shame, in many cases, upon the face." Richardson.

"It is a pity that shamefast and shamefastness, by which last word our translators rendered σωφροσύνη here, should have been corrupted in modern use to shamefaced and shamefacedness. The words are properly of the same formation as steadfast, steadfastness, soothfast, soothfastness, and those good old English words, now lost to us, rootfast and rootfastness. As by rootfast our fathers understood that which was firm and fast by its root, so by shamefast, in like manner, that which was established and made fast by (an honorable) shame. To change this into shamefaced is to allow all the meaning and force of the word to run to the surface, to leave us, ethically, a far inferior word. It is very inexcusable that all modern reprints should have given in to this corruption." Trench's Synonymes of the New Testament.

SHAME'FUL, a. 1. Bringing shame; injurious to character or reputation; disgraceful; disreputable; dishonorable; scandalous; infamous.

Shameful murder of a guiltless king. Shak.

1. (Ich.) A name given to any fish of the family Squalidae, which is composed of many genera and many species.

Blue shark (Carcharias glaucus).

The form of the body differs much in the different genera. They are characterized, however, in general, by having a rounded body terminated by a large, conical, fleshy tail. The muzzle is rounded or pointed, depressed, and projects over the mouth; so that, when the shark is going to seize its prey, it is obliged to turn on one side or on its back. The teeth are generally large and in the form of an isosceles triangle, sometimes smooth, sometimes finely notched on their outer margin. They are arranged in several series, one within another. The skin is usually rough and covered with a multitude of little osseous tubercles. It is an extremely voracious fish, and it swims with great velocity. The white shark (Carcharias vulgaris) in size and voracity is the most formidable of all the species, and attains sometimes the length of thirty feet.—See HAMMER-FISH. Baird.

"In England, he has judicial as well as ministerial powers, being authorized to hold courts for the trial of small causes. In his ministerial capacity, he is bound to execute all process issuing out of the superior courts. In the United States, the powers and duties of the sheriff, in addition to those of conservator of the peace, are chiefly ministerial, he being the officer to whom the process of the superior courts in the several states is always directed for execution. In the commencement of civil causes, he serves the writ, and, in cases requiring it, arrests and takes bail; when the cause comes to trial, he summons and returns the jury, and, when it is determined, he sees the judgment of the court carried into execution. In criminal matters, he also arrests and imprisons, he returns the jury, he has the custody of the delinquent, and he executes the sentence of the court, though it extend to death itself. His judicial powers are much more limited than in England, being chiefly confined to the taking of inquisitions on writs of inquiry of damages before a jury summoned for the purpose." Burrill.

1. An English silver coin of the value of 12d. sterling ($0.242); one twentieth of a pound.

2. A term applied to different divisions of the dollar in the currency of the United States.

In Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island,

New Hampshire, Vermont, Maine, Kentucky, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Virginia, Tennessee, Mississippi, Texas, and Florida, the shilling is equivalent to one-sixth of a dollar, or sixteen cents and two thirds. In New York, Ohio, and Michigan, it is equivalent to one-eighth of a dollar, or twelve cents and a half. In North Carolina, it is equivalent to one-tenth of a dollar, or ten cents. In New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, and Maryland, it is equivalent to thirteen cents and one third, the dollar being reckoned at seven shillings and a half. In South Carolina and Georgia, it is equivalent to twenty-one cents and three sevenths, the dollar being reckoned at four shillings and two-thirds. Winslow.

“Some derive this word from the Jewish or Hebrew שָׁלַל to weigh; Lat. Mid. siclus; Fr. sicle, the fourth part of an ounce, and observe that payments were originally made by weight, as they still are in some countries. Junius refers shilling to the old skella, to sound. He pretends that all thicker coins were called shilling, in opposition to the coin made of thin plated metal, or bracteates, which had no sound. Wachter thinks that the Mes. skula [a debtor], the A. S. scylde, is the root of shilling, originally used for a fine. Other etymologists derive this word from the Ger. schald, shield; and thus shilling, or rather schilling, would signify a coin stamped with the arms of the prince, or any other person who has the right or privilege of coining. Frisch derives shilling from the Lat. solidus. Ibre, whose views Adelung most approves, thinks that the original signification of shilling is the Ger. scheide münze; Swed. skilje mynt; Dan. skille mynt. This opinion is confirmed by the circumstance that the oldest larger coins were marked by a deep stamped or impressed cross, in such a manner that they could be easily broken into two, three, or four pieces; the different value of shillings is thus easily explained.—Seylan, to divide, or scale, a balance, a scale.” Bosworth.

SHILL-I-SHALL-I, ad. [A corrupt reduplication of SHIL'LY-SHÄL'LY, a notion of shall I? Shall I, or shall I not?] In the manner of one who does not know his own mind;—an expression of indecision.

I do n't stand shill-I-shall-I then; if I say 't, I'll do 't. Congreve.

SHIL'LOH, n. [Heb. שִׁלְלוֹהֹ.] An epithet applied by Jacob on his death-bed (Gen. xlix. 10) to the personage to whom the “gathering of the nations should be”;—regarded by Christians and by the ancient Jews as a denomination of the Messiah. Kittó.

SHIRE, or SHIRE [shir, W. P. J. E. F. Ja. K. Sm. C.; shir, S. E. Ja. K. C. W. W. b.; shir or shir, F.], n. [A. S. scir, scire; searan, sciran, to shear, to divide.—W. sir, a shire.] In England, a territorial division, same as county:—used also in composition; as Yorkshire, i. e. the county of York.

The noble youths from distant shires resort. Prior.

In the United States, the word shire is used to form the constituent parts of two names of counties; as, Berkshire and Hampshire. In the north of England, some districts smaller than counties have the provincial appellation of shires, as Richmondshire in the North Riding of Yorkshire; Hallamshire, or the manor of Hallam, in the West Riding, which is nearly coterminous with the parish of Sheffield. Branda.

"The pronunciation of this word is very irregular, as it is the only pure English word in the language where the final e does not produce the long diphthongal sound of i when the accent is on it; but this irregularity is so fixed as to give the regular sound a pedantic stiffness. Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, and Buchanan, however, have adopted this sound, in which they have been followed by Mr. Smith; but Mr. Elphinstone, Dr. Lowth, Dr. Konrick, Mr. Perry, and Barclay are for the irregular sound; W. Johnston gives both, but places the irregular first. It may likewise be observed, that this word, when unaccented at the end of words, as Nottinghamshire, Wiltshire, &c., is always pronounced with the i like ee." Walker.

Syn.—See DISTRICT.

† SHIRE'-MÖTE, n. [A. S. scire-gemot.] A county court; the principal court of the Saxons, held twice a year before the bishop and aldermen. Burke.

SHOULD (shüd), v. n. [Old Eng. shulden.—See SHALL.] An auxiliary and defective verb, denoting obligation, duty, possibility, or contingency.

—It is regarded as the preterite of shall, and is used to form the past tenses of the potential mood, but it is likewise used in the conditional present and future tenses. "He should have paid the bill yesterday." "He should do right now and always." "If I should see him, or should I see him to-morrow, I will inform him." In the first instance, should is used in the past tense; in the second, in the present; and, in the third, in the future. The following remarks are quoted from Dr. Johnson: "1. This is a kind of auxiliary verb used in the conjunctive [potential] mood, of which the signification is not easily fixed. 2. I should go, it is my business or duty to go. 3. If I should go, if it happens that I go. 4. Thou shouldst go, thou oughtest to go. 5. If thou shouldst go, if it happens that thou goest. 6. The same significations are joined in all the other persons, singular and plural."

—The difference between should and would, when used as futures in connection with past tenses, is the same as that between shall and will; that is, should simply foretells in the first person, and would threatens in the others. Would promises or threatens in the first, and simply foretells in the others. Hunter.—See OUGHT, and SHALL.

SHÖUL'DER (shöl'der), n. [A. S. sculder, scul-dor; Frs. scoulder; Dut. schouder; Ger. schulter; Dan. skulder; Sw. skuldra.—From A. S. scylan, to separate, to divide. Tooke.]

SICK'NESS, n. [Ger. sucht, passion. — See SICK.]
1. The state of being sick; disease; disorder; malady; illness.
I have been sick, and have been cured with a trial and a di- . . . Whately.
2. Disorder of the stomach; nausea.
Syn. — Sickness denotes the state of being sick; illness, that of being ill; indisposition, that of being indisposed. Of these three terms sickness is the strongest, and indisposition the weakest. Sick and ill are often used indiscriminately; but sick often supposes the disease to proceed from within, ill from without; sick at the stomach, sick of a fever; ill of the measles or of wounds. Sick denotes a temporary state; sickly, a more permanent one, as he who is sickly is seldom well; a sickly constitution; very sick or ill, a severe sickness; a slight indisposition; an ill state of health; ill at ease; morbid feeling; disordered mind. Sick often implies nausea, disgust, distaste, or dislike; as, sick at heart; sick of a bargain, of company, or of the world.
Ill and illness, as applied to disease, are now much more used in the language than formerly. The term illness is not to be found in the common version of the Bible, or in the poetry of Shakespeare or of Milton, sick and sickness being used instead of ill and illness;
as, "All manner of sickness"; "Heal the sick";
"Sick of the palsy, of fever," &c. But the terms ill and illness, as applied to common diseases, have been much more used within the present century than they were previously. — See DISEASE.

 "A very extraordinary pronunciation of this word prevails in London, and, what is more extraordinary, on the stage, so different from every other word of the same force as to make it a perfect oddity in the language. This pronunciation approaches to the word sithe; and the only difference is, that sithe has the flat aspiration, as in this, and sigh the sharp one, as in thin. It is not easy to conjecture what could be the reason of this departure from analogy, unless it were to give the word a sound which seems an echo to the sense: but pronouncing gh like th in this word is too palpable a contempt of orthography to pass current without the stamp of the best, the most universal, and permanent usage on its side."

Walker. This "extraordinary pronunciation" of sigh is more or less common in some parts of the United States. It is not countenanced by any of the orthoepists.
 SIGH'ER (st'er), n. One who sighs. Beau. & Fl.

7. The subscription of one's name; a signature. Johnson.

8. A term used by the English Church, in her formularies, to signify the relation that subsists between an external ordinance and that which it represents. Eden.

9. (Mus.) Any character. Moore.

10. (Astron.) A portion of the ecliptic or zodiac containing thirty degrees, or a twelfth part of the complete circle. Brande.

11. The first of the twelve signs commences at the point of the ecliptic through which the sun passes at the time of the vernal equinox, and they are counted from west to east. Their names, in the order in which they follow each other, together with the characters by which they are indicated on globes, in almanacs, and in books of astronomy, are as follows:—Aries (♈), Taurus (♉), Gemini (♊), Cancer (♋), Leo (♌), Virgo (♍), Libra (♎), Scorpio (♏), Sagittarius (♐), Capricornus (♑), Aquarius (♒), Pisces (♓).—The signs derived their names from twelve constellations of the zodiac, with which their places coincided in ancient times (above 200 years before the Christian era); but owing to the precession or westward motion of the equinoxes, the constellations are now each about thirty degrees east of the sign of the same name.—See PRECESSION OF THE EQUINOXES Brande. Herschel.

11. (Algebra.) A symbol used to denote the relation of quantities, to indicate an operation to be performed, or to show the nature of a result of some previous operation; as, the sign ÷ (÷) for addition, the sign — (minus) for subtraction, the sign × for multiplication, &c. Davies & Peck.

Syn.—See MARK, SIGNAL.

SIGN (sîn), v. a. [L. signo; It. segnare; Sp. señalar; Fr. signer.—A. S. senian; Dut. seinen.]

[i. SIGNED; pp. SIGNING, SIGNED.]

1. To mark with a type or symbol.

We receive this child into the congregation of Christ's flock, and do sign him with the sign of the cross. Com. Prayer.

2. To mark with one's name or signature, as an instrument or writing; to subscribe.

Be pleased to sign these papers; they are all of great concern. Dryden.
It was usual for persons who could not write to make the sign of a cross in confirmation of a charter. From this is derived the phrase of signing, instead of subscribing a paper. Robertson.

3. To represent typically; to indicate by a sign; to signify; to betoken; to denote.

They [the sacraments and symbols] receive the names of what themselves do sign. Dp. Taylor.

2. That which is expressed by signs or words; meaning; import; sense.

It [Lord] is a word, therefore, of large and various signification. Horner.

Tropes, which, you know, change the nature of a known word by applying to it some other signification. Dryden.

3. (French Law.) The notice given of a decree, sentence, or other judicial act. Bourvier.

Syn. — The signification of a word is that which it is made to signify; the meaning, that which it is meant to express. In this sense, we may say indifferently the proper, improper, metaphorical, general, &c., signification or meaning of words; but, in reference to individuals, meaning is more proper than signification, as to convey a meaning, to attach a meaning to a word, and not to convey or attach a signification. On the other hand, it is more proper to say a literal signification than a literal meaning. The common or literal signification of a word; the meaning intended to be conveyed; the import of the phrase or the terms; the sense or meaning of the writer or of the sentence.

SIG-NIF-I-CA-TIVE, a. [L. significativus; It. & Sp. significativo; Fr. significatif.]

Sİ-LÈ-SIAN (se-lè-shan), a. Pertaining to, or made in, Silesia. Wright.

Sİ-LÈ-SIAN, n. (Geog.) A native or an inhabitant of Silesia. Clarke.

SİLEX, n. [L., a flint.] (Min.) Pure quartz, or flint; silicic acid; silica. — See SILICA. Dana.

SILHOUETTE (sil'ə-tē), n. [Fr., from Silhouette, a French minister of finance, the inventor or improver.] (Fine Arts.) A profile, or the entire figure of any thing represented in black, the form being indicated only by the outline: — a flat piece of metal, card, or other material cut so as to represent the outline of any figure. Fairholt.

The invention of what is called a silhouette is, however, ascribed to a remote period. — The Etruscan vases furnish, to an amazing extent, and in boundless variety, some of the most beautifully drawn and elegant monochromes, or silhouettes, that have ever been executed. Brande.

SİL'I-CA, n. [L. silex, silicis, a flint.] (Chem.) A substance composed of silicon and oxygen, constituting the principal portion of most of the hard stones and minerals which compose the crust of the globe, and occurring nearly pure in rock crystal, quartz, agate, chalcedony, flint, &c. It is capable of forming salts with bases, and is hence called also silicic acid. Ure.

Silica was formerly ranked among the earths proper, but since the researches of Davy and Berzelius, it has been transferred to the class of acids. When prepared pure it is a white, tasteless, odorless powder, rough to the touch, gritty between the teeth, and insoluble in any acid except the fluoric. In its solid form it is quite insoluble in water, but Berzelius has shown that if presented to water, while in the nascent state, it is dissolved in large quantity. Its specific gravity is 2.66. Ure. Turner.

SİL'I-CATE, n. A compound of silicic acid and some base. Ure.

SİL'I-CÁT-ED, a. Impregnated with silica. Brande.
Silicated soap, (Chem.) a mixture of silicate of soda and hard soap, — usually adulterated with china clay. Parnell.

SİL'ICE, n. (Bot.) A silicle. Smart.

Sİ-LİC'IC, a. Derived from or containing silica.
Silicic acid, (Chem.) silica. — See SILICA.

SİL-I-CI-CÁL-CÁ'RE-OÜS, a. Consisting of silica and calcareous matter. Clarke.

SİL-I-CI-CÁLCE', n. [L. silex, flint, and calx, calcis, lime or limestone.] (Min.) A mixture of silica and carbonate of lime occurring in amorphous masses in Provence. Brongniart.

SİL-I-CIF-ER-OÜS, a. [L. silex and fero, to bear.] Containing silica. Ure.

Sİ-LİC-I-FI-CÁ-TION, n. Conversion into stone by the infiltration of silicic matter; petrification. Sir J. C. Ross.

Sİ-LİC'I-FIED, p. a. Petrified or mineralized by silicific earth. Lyell.

Sİ-LİC'I-FŶ, v. a. [L. silex, silicis, flint, and facio, to make.] To convert into silica, or to petrify by silica. Dana.

Sİ-LI'CIOUS (se-lish'us), a. [L. silicicus, siliceus; silex, silicis, flint.] Pertaining to, resembling, or containing silica. "Silicious earth." Kirwan.

Silicious sinter, (Min.) a light, cellular quartz. Dana.

This word is written silicious and siliceous. The orthography of siliceous is that which is found in nearly or quite all the common English dictionaries; but that of siliceous is more common in works of science. It is sometimes confounded with silicious.

SİL'I-CITE, n. (Min.) A mineral composed of silica, alumina, lime, and soda; labradorite; Labrador spar. It is susceptible of a fine polish, is often very beautiful from its chatoyant reflections, and is sometimes used in jewellery. Dana.

Sİ-LİC'I-TED, a. Impregnated with silica. Kirwan.

Sİ-LI'C-ÜM (se-lish'e-üm), n. (Chem.) The name formerly applied to silicon when it was classed with the metals. — See SILICON. Turner.

Sİ-LİC'I-U-RÉT-TED, a. (Chem.) Containing, or combined with, silicon. Graham.

Silicuretted hydrogen, (Chem.) a remarkable gaseous compound of silicon and hydrogen, which takes fire spontaneously when it escapes into the air, producing a brilliant white light and a copious white flame. Graham.

SİL'I-CLE, n. [L. silicula, dim. of silica, a pod.] (Bot.) A pod, as that of shepherd's purse, differing from the silicle only in being short and broad; a pouch. Gray.

SİL-I-CO-FLŪ-ATE, n. (Chem.) A salt composed of silicofluoric acid and a salifiable base. Brande.

SİL-I-CO-FLŪ-ÖR'IC, a. (Chem.) Noting an acid composed of hydrofluoric acid and fluoride of silicon, and combining with bases to form salts; hydrofluosilicic. Miller.

SİL'I-CO-FLŪ'O-RIDE, n. (Chem.) A compound of silicon and fluorine; as, silico-fluoride of potassium. Brande.

SIL'IC-ŌN, n. (Chem.) A simple, non-metallic, infusible substance, constituting the base of silica.

There are three modifications of silicon which exhibit different appearances and have different properties, in respect to combustibility, solubility, the power of conducting electricity, &c. Two of them are in the form of a dull powder; the other is in the form of brilliant plates possessed of metallic lustre. Miller.

SIL'IC-U-LA, n. [L.] (Bot.) A silicle. Brande.

SIL'ICULE, n. (Bot.) A silicle. Loudon.

SIL'IC-U-LŌSE', a. [L. silicula, a pod.]

1. (Bot.) Bearing, or pertaining to, silicles. Gray.

2. Full of husks; husky. Bailey.

† SIL'IG-I-NŌSE', a. [L. siligo, fine wheat.] Made of fine wheat. Bailey.

SIL'ING-DISH, n. [Sw. sila, to strain.] A strainer; a colander. [Local, Eng.] Barret.

SIL'QUA, n.; pl. siliquæ. [L.]

1. (Bot.) A silicle. Henslow.

2. (Gold Finers.) A carat; a weight of about four grains. Bailey.

SIL'IQUE' (sē-lēk'), n. [Fr.] (Bot.) A long, narrow, two-celled pod having a false partition between the two parietal placentæ, as in plants of the mustard family. Gray.

SIL'QUĒL'LA, n. (Bot.) A subordinate part of such fruit as the poppy, composed of the carpel and two extended placentæ. Henslow.

SIL'QU-I-FŌRM, a. Having the form of a silique. Clarke.

SIL'QUŌ-SA, n. [L. siliqua, a pod.] (Bot.) A Linnæan order of plants, containing those whose seed-vessels are siliques. Henslow.

SIL'QUŌSE', a. (Bot.) Bearing siliques, or pods resembling siliques. Gray.

SILK, n. [A. S. seolc; Dut. zijde; Ger. seide; Dan. & Sw. silke; Icel. silki. — Ir. sioda; W. si-dan. — Russ. schilk. — Gr. σηκόν, Σηκός, a people of Eastern Asia (the Chinese), from whom the ancients first obtained silk; L. sericum; It. seta; Sp. seda; Fr. soie. — Arab. & Per. silk, a thread. — Chinese, se, silk. — Bosworth derives the Arab. and Per. from Arab. salaka, to send in, to insert, to pass or go. — Richardson derives the A. S. and Eng. from L. sericum (Gr. σηκόν), and the Ger., It., Fr., &c. from L. Sidaon, the Sidonians or Phœnicians. — Landais and Diez derive the It., Sp., Fr., Ger., &c. from L. seta, thick, stiff hair on animals.]

1. Fine, glossy thread, spun, in the form of cocoons, by various species of caterpillars, especially by the larvæ of the genus Bombyx, or Phalœna, or the silk-worm, being secreted by two glandular organs. Eng. Cyc. Microg. Dict.

2. Cloth made of silk. "Rustling of silks." Shak. "Persian silks." Waller.

3. The style of maize; — so called on account of its resemblance to threads of silk. Clarke.

Rare silk, thread made by winding off on a reel several cocoons immersed in hot water to soften the natural gum on the filaments. Brande. — Virginian silk, a climbing plant growing in Syria; Periploca Græca. Crabb.

1. A white, very malleable, ductile, tenacious, and crystallizable metal, of a brilliant lustre when polished, much used for coin and plate.

Silver has a specific gravity of 10.53; is fusible at 1773° Fahrenheit, and on cooling undergoes considerable expansion at the moment of becoming solid; is intermediate between copper and gold in hardness; is an excellent conductor of heat and electricity; is not oxidized by exposure to a dry or to a moist atmosphere, but is tarnished by sulphuretted hydrogen, a thin film of sulphide of silver being formed. Silver has been used as a medium of exchange by all civilized nations from the earliest ages. It occurs in small quantities in very many localities, and is found in considerable quantities in Norway, Saxony, Bohemia, Siberia, but most abundantly in Mexico and Peru. Miller. Amer. Ency.

2. Money or coin of silver. Johnson.

Antimonial silver, (Min.) a mineral of a metallic lustre, sometimes crystallized, and composed of silver and antimony; called also discrete. Dana. — Arsenic silver, (Min.) a mixture of mispickel, arsenical iron, and disacrite. Dana. — Bismuth silver, (Min.) a soft, sectile mineral, rarely presenting acicular or capillary crystallizations, generally amorphous, of a tin-white or grayish color, and consisting of bismuth, lead, silver, iron, copper, and sulphur, called also bismuthic silver ore. Dana. — Black silver, (Min.) a sectile, iron-black mineral, sometimes crystallized, of a metallic lustre, and composed of silver, antimony, and sulphur. This valuable ore of silver occurs in Germany, Mexico, and Peru. It is also called brittle silver ore, brittle silver glance, brittle sulphuret of silver, and stephanite. Dana. — Bromic silver, (Min.) a sectile mineral of splendid lustre, occurring in small concretions, rarely in crystals, and consisting of bromine and silver; — called also bromopyrite and bromate, and found in Mexico, Chili, and Buitany. Dana. — Horn silver, (Min.) a sectile mineral, sometimes crystallized, usually massive, and looking like wax; sometimes columnar or bent columnar, and often in crusts; of various colors, more or less translucent, and composed of chlorine and silver; — valuable as a silver ore, and called also chloride of silver, and kerargyrite. Dana. — Cupreous sulphuret of silver, (Min.) a sectile, dark steel-gray mineral, crystallized, massive, or compact, of a metallic lustre, and composed of silver, copper, and sulphur; — called also sulphuret of silver and copper, and stromeysterite. Dana. — Flexible silver ore, (Min.) a variety of strombergite, and consisting of silver, iron, and sulphur. Dana. — Gray silver, (Min.) a sectile, brittle, crystalline mineral, of metallic lustre, of various shades of gray, and composed of sulphur, antimony, lead, and silver; — called also freislebenite, antimonial sulphuret of silver, and sulphuret of silver and antimony. Dana. — Fulminating silver, (Chem.) a very explosive black powder, formed by digesting for some hours newly precipitated oxide of silver in concentrated ammonia; — supposed by some chemists to be an ammoniuret of silver, and by others a nitride of silver. Graham. Mil'ér. — Iodic silver, (Min.) a soft, sectile, yellow, or yellowish mineral, occurring in crystals, and in thin, sectile, flexible plates, and composed of iodine and silver; — called also iodurite. Dana. — Native silver, (Min.) a white, ductile mineral, consisting of silver, with some copper, gold, platinum, antimony, and other metals; of metallic lustre, occurring crystallized, in plates, or superficial coatings, and in masses. When pure, it has a specific gravity of 10.5. It is sometimes found in masses weighing several hundred pounds. — Ruby silver, (Min.) a sectile mineral, sometimes crystallized, of a black color, sometimes approaching to cochineal-red, of a metallic, adamantine lustre, and composed of silver, antimony, and sulphur; — called also pyrrargyrite and black silver. Dana. — Telluric silver, (Min.) a gray, slightly malleable mineral, occurring granular and in coarse grained masses, of metallic lustre, and composed of tellurium and silver; — called also heskite. Dana. — Vitreous silver, (Min.) an opaque, blackish lead-gray mineral, sometimes crystallized, of metallic lustre, and composed of sulphur and silver; — called also silver glance, and sulphuret of silver. Dana. — Silver glance. See VITREOUS SILVER. — Brittle silver ore, or ore, (Min.) See BLACK SILVER. — German silver, a compound of copper, nickel, and zinc, of a yellowish-white color, and, when freshly polished, resembling silver; — called also packfong. Miller. — Light-red silver ore, (Min.) a sub-transparent, or sub-translucent, cochineal-red, crystallized or granular mineral, of adamantine lustre, and composed of silver, arsenic, and sulphur; — called also proustite. Dana.

† SÍ'M'Í-LÁR-Y, a. Similar. Johnson. Reid.

SÍ'M'Í-LÉ, n. (Rhet.) A comparison by which any thing is illustrated or aggrandized; a comparison of two objects, which, though in the main dissimilar, yet have resemblance in some point or points; a comparison; a similitude. Shak.

"The metaphor expresses with rapidity the analogy as it rises in immediate suggestion, and identifies it, as it were, with the object or emotion which it describes; the simile presents not the analogy merely, but the two analogous objects, and traces their resemblances to each other with the formality of regular comparison. The metaphor, therefore, is the figure of passion, the simile the figure of calm description." Dr. Thomas Brown.

"The metaphor is only a bolder and more elliptical simile." P. Cyc.

Syn. — Simile and comparison, as figures of rhetoric, are used synonymously; similitude is also used for a simile, or a prolonged and continued simile. A simile or comparison differs from a metaphor chiefly in form; the resemblance in a simile being stated, and in a metaphor implied. The phrase, "The moon bright as silver," contains a simile or comparison; the phrase, "The silver moon," contains a metaphor.

SÍ-MÍL'Í-TER, n. [L. in like manner.] (Law.) A short formula used either at the end of pleadings, or by itself, expressing the acceptance of an issue of fact tendered by the opposite party; — called also joinder in issue. Burrill.

Sİ'PHON (sî'fôn), n. [Gr. σίφων; L. siphon; It. sifone; Sp. sifon; Fr. siphon.]

1. An apparatus or tube for decanting a liquid from a vessel without inverting or otherwise disturbing the position of the vessel. Young.

The most simple form of the siphon is a bent tube, as B C in the figure. When the siphon is filled with liquid, and one branch is partly immersed in the liquid to be decanted, while the other branch descends lower than the surface of that liquid, the pressure of the atmosphere tends equally to force the liquid upwards in both branches. But the tendency of the liquid, due to its gravity, to flow downwards in the outer branch, exceeds that in the inner, in proportion as the outer orifice is lower than the surface of the liquid in the vessel, this excess destroys the equilibrium. The atmospheric pressure propagated from the surface of the liquid, thus becoming effective in the inner branch, forces the liquid up through the tube, replacing it with more liquid from the vessel, and thus maintaining the stream, till the surface of the liquid is lower than the orifice of the inner or of the outer branch. A, in the figure, represents a siphon provided with a lateral tube and stop-cock, for more conveniently exhausting the air from the siphon when it is to be filled. B represents a Wurtemburg siphon, which may be kept constantly filled with a liquid, and always ready for immediate use.

SIR'LÖIN [sir'loin, J. E. F. Sm. R. Wb.; sir-loin', Ja. Rees], n. The loin, or the upper part of the loin of beef, or a piece of beef covering either kidney;—written also surlain. W. Ency.

Johnson, in his definition of sir, says it is "a title given to the loin of beef, which one of our kings knighted in a fit of good humor," or, as another phrases it, "in one of his merry moods." In this account of the origin of surlain Johnson has been generally followed by subsequent English lexicographers who have spoken of its etymology. The king referred to, according to some, was Charles II., but, according to a greater number, James I. The following account is given by Dean Swift in his "Polite Conversation": "But pray why is it called a surlain?—Why, you must know that our King James I., who loved good eating, being invited to dinner by one of his nobles, and seeing a large loin of beef at his table, he drew out his sword, and in a frolic knighted it." Whether this was related by Swift in a serious or "merry mood" may be doubted, as it may well be doubted whether this is a correct account of the origin of the word.

T. T. Wilkinson (in "Notes and Queries," vol. ii.) says, "The popular tradition of knighting the surlain has found its way into many publications of a local tendency, and, among the rest, into the graphic 'Traditions of Lancashire,' by the late Mr. Roby." Mr. Roby, in giving an account of an entertainment given to James I. at Houghton Tower, near Blackburn, Lancashire, says, "These fooleries put the king into such good humor, that he was more witty in his speech than ordinary. Some of these sayings have been recorded, and, amongst the rest, that well-known quibble, which has been the origin of an absurd mistake, still current through the country, respecting the surlain. The occasion, as far as we have been able to gather, was this: Whilst he sat at meat, casting his eyes upon a noble surlain at the lower end of the table, he cried out, 'Bring hither that surlain, sirrah, for 'tis worthy of a more honorable post, being, as I may say, not sir-loin, but surlain, the noblest joint of all,' which ridiculous and desperate pun raised the wisdom and reputation of England's Solomon to the highest."

This word is not found in any English dictionary previous to that of Johnson with the orthography of surlain, the earlier orthography being surloun. Bailey's Dictionary has surlain of beef, corresponding to the French surlonge de bœuf, the obvious or probable etymology. Surlain is also given by Answorth; and the word occurs repeatedly in Cotgrave's Dictionary, first published in 1611, with the orthography of surlouns and surloune.—See SURLOIN.

SIR'NAME, n. See SURNAME.

SIR'ROCCO, n.; pl. sir-rôc'côs. [It. sirocco; Sp. siroco; Fr. siroc.—It may be ventus Syriacus, or blowing from Syria. Skinner.] A periodical, warm, relaxing south or south-east wind, which generally blows in the south of Italy, in Malta, Sicily, and in Dalmatia. Brande.

SIR'RAH (sir'rah or sir'rah) [sir'ra, S. W. P. J. F. K.; sir'ra, Ja. Sm. C. Johnston; sir'ra, Wb.; sir'rah, E. Elphinstone], n. or interj. [sir'ra, Minshew and Skinner.] An adaptation of the word sir, when used with anger, contempt, or insult, or in playfulness.

"This is a corruption of the first magnitude, but too general and inveterate to be remedied. Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Nares, Mr. Scott, Dr. Kenrick, and Mr.

Perry pronounce it as I have done. W. Johnston alone pronounces it as if written serrah. and Mr. Elphinstone, because it is derived from sir and the intersection ah, says it ought to have the first syllable like sir." Walker.

+ SIRT, n. [L. syrtis.] A bog.—See SYRTIS.

2. To cause to combine with water, or with water and carbonic acid, as lime; to slack. Miller.

3. "It is used of lime; so that it is uncertain whether the original notion of to slack or slake lime is to powder or quench it." Johnson. Slack and slake, as applied to lime, are much confounded.

4. "There is a corrupt pronunciation of this word like the word slack. This is the word, as Dr. Johnson observes, from which it is evidently derived; but, as it has acquired a distinct and appropriated meaning, it is with great propriety that it differs a little from its original both in orthography and pronunciation.

"All our orthoepists unite in pronouncing this word regularly; but, as Mr. Smith observes, bucklayers and their laborers universally pronounce it with the short a, as if written slack; and it may be added that the correctest speakers, when using the participial adjective in the words unsalted lime, pronounce the a in the same manner; but this ought to be avoided." Walker.

"Slaked lime is usually called slacked lime, which implies lime loosened or reduced to powder; but the original notion is probably quenched lime." Smart.

Syn.—To slake is to quench partially; to quench or extinguish is to put out entirely. If a person slakes his thirst, he is but partially satisfied with drink; if he quenches it, he is entirely satisfied. Slake thirst; quench thirst or fire; extinguish flame.

SLÄKE, v. n. 1. To grow less tense; to slack.

But when the body's strongest sinews slake. Davies.

2. To abate. "The fever slaketh." Barret.

SLÄN'DER, v. a. [Su. Goth. klander, from kland, infamy. Jamieson.—Old Fr. esclander.—Sw. klanda, to dishonor.—See SLANDER, n.] [i. SLANDERED; pp. SLANDERING, SLANDERED.]

To injure by false and malicious reports; to censure falsely; to belie; to defame; to asperse; to calumniate.

He hath slandered thy servant unto the king. 2 Sam. xix. 27.

Syn.—See ASPERSE.

SLÄN'DER, n. [L. scandalum, from Gr. σκάνδαλον, a stumbling-block. Johnson.—Nor. Fr. esclander.—Sw. klander.—Anciently written seclander.]

1. Detraction; defamation; calumny; false reproach; utterance of injurious reports against another; backbiting; aspersion.

Whether he be a slanderer or a false friend, or behind his back, we usually find that he is the most generous, but we call him a slanderer, because we call him a liar. Tillotson.

The worstliest people are the most malicious. Swift.

In all cases of slander currency, whenever the forger of the lie is not to be found, the originator is to be sought for.

2. Disgrace; dishonor; reproach. [R.]

Thou slander of thy mother's heavy womb. Shak.

3. (Law.) Defamation by words spoken; the utterance of false, malicious, and defamatory words, tending to the damage and derogation of another:—in old law, defamation generally, whether oral or written. Burrill.

Written or printed slanders are libels. Donner.

Syn.—Slander, defamation, calumny, detraction, and aspersion all imply hostility, and an intention to injure the person who is the object of them. Slander or defamation is the act of maliciously uttering in words that which is false to the gross injury of a person in his reputation or honor. It is a less offence in law than libel, and is either written or printed defamation. A person slanders or calumniates another by fabricating and circulating false and injurious reports, or by communicating to others such as are already in circulation; he defames by promulgating any thing calculated to injure a person's fair fame or character; he detracts by depreciating the merit, motives, and good deeds of another; and he asperses by throwing out insinuations against a person's character or conduct. A calumniator is more despicable than a slanderer, the former term being more restricted to one who originates the false accusation.

SLÄN'DER-OÜS, a. 1. Uttering or containing slander; defamatory; false and malicious; calumnious. "Slanderous tongues." Shak.

As he flatters a man opens his mouth to his mortal enemy, so by detraction and a slanderous misreport he shuts the same to his best friends. South.

2. Scandalous; reproachful; shameful. [R.]

The vile and slanderous death of the cross. Homilies.

SLÄN'DER-OÜS-LY, ad. With slander; calumniously. Spenser.

SLÄN'DER-OÜS-NESS, n. The quality of being slanderous; reproach. Scott.

1. (Min.) A name applied to several rocks which have the property of cleavage or splitting into plates, and, in some instances, in a direction oblique to the stratification.—See SLAT-CLEAVAGE.

2. Schist is often used as synonymous with slate; but hypogene or primary schists, such as gneiss, mica schist, and other kinds, cannot be split into an indefinite number of parallel laminae like rocks which have a true slaty cleavage. Lyell.

Aluminous or alum slate, a scitello kind of slate, occurring low in the coal measures, used in the manufacture of alum, and consisting chiefly of silica, alumina, carbon, sulphur, and water. Cleveland. Graham.—Argillaceous or clay slate, argillaceous schist. See SCHIST.—Stonewarefield slate, a fissile, calcareous slate, occurring in the lower oolite formation, and abounding in organic remains;—so called from Stonesfield, Oxfordshire, near which it is found, and locally used for slating. Ansted.—Chlorite slate, chlorite schist. See SCHIST.—Graphite slate, a sectile, smooth, and sometimes unctuous slate, used by artificers for tracing lines, and, when fine, soft, and pure, for black crayons in drawing;—called also Italian stone. Cleaveland.—Talcose slate, a dark, slaty rock, having a somewhat greasy feel, consisting largely of talc, mixed intimately with more or less of felspar and quartz. Dana.—Drawing slate or black chalk. See GRAPHIC SLATE.—Adhesive slate, a variety of slate, of a greenish-gray color, that absorbs water rapidly with a crackling sound and the emission of air-bubbles;—so called from its adhering strongly to the tongue. Tomlinson.—Slate clay, one of the alternating beds of the coal measures. It is an infusible compound of silica and alumina, and is used for making fire-bricks. Stourbridge clay is a variety of it. Tomlinson.—Polishing slate, a very soft, massive slate, of a cream-yellow color in alternate stripes, dull lustre, and adhering to the tongue;—found only in Bohemia. Ure.—Roof-slate, a hard slate, dull or of feeble lustre, blackish-gray, bluish-black, bluish or reddish-brown, or greenish, &c., and characterized, in its most perfect state, by easily splitting into large, thin, and straight layers or plates, which are sonorous when struck with a hard body. The better qualities of slate are used for roofing, writing slates, and for monuments in grave-yards. Cleaveland.—Hornblende slate, a rock consisting of felspar and hornblende, with some chlorite;—used for flagging. Dana.—Whet slate, a variety of argillaceous slate, of various colors, used for sharpening instruments, under the names of hone, oil-stone, Turkey-stone, and whet-stone;—called also navasute. Cleaveland.—Siliceous slate, a mineral of a more or less slaty structure, occurring in masses which are usually amorphous, sometimes rounded, and almost always traversed by veins of quartz, and composed chiefly of silica, alumina, potash, and oxide of iron. Cleaveland.

2. Scent; odor; quality of affecting the olfactory nerves. "The smell of a violet." Locke.
Syn.—The term smell has both an active and a passive meaning, denoting the sense or power of smelling and of receiving odor by the nose. Smell and scent are both said either of that which receives or that which gives smell; odor, perfume, and fragrance, of that which communicates smell. All animals are supposed to possess smell, and some, particularly dogs, possess a peculiar scent. Smell is indefinite in its sense, and of general application; scent, odor, perfume, and fragrance are species of smell. Every object that acts upon the olfactory nerves is said to have smell. Scent is commonly applied to the smell which proceeds from animal bodies; odor to that which is artificial or extraneous. Smell and odor may be pleasant or unpleasant; perfume and fragrance pleasant.

SÖAP (söp), n. [A. S. sape; Dut. zeep; Ger.
seife; Dan. sæbe; Sw. sæpa; Icel. sæpa.—Gr.
saipw; L. sapo; It. sapone; Sp. saabon; Port.
sabao; Fr. savon.—W. sebon.—Hind. saboon, savin; Pers. sabun.—Pliny and Martial assure us that soap, made ex sebo et cinere, from tallow and ashes, is an invention of the Gauls."
Bosworth.] A word applied, in its most extended signification, to all the compounds which result from the reactions of salifiable bases with fats and oils; but commonly applied, in a more restrictive sense, to detergent substances, soluble in water and alcohol, especially when hot, but insoluble in strong brine or concentrated solutions of caustic potash or of soda; and consisting, for the most part, of three fatty acids,— termed stearic, margaric, and oleic acids,—or of two of them, combined with an alkaline base. Miller. Wood & Bache.

There are in commerce three varieties of soap; hard white soap, which is made from tallow and caustic soda; hard yellow soap, which is made from soda, with tallow, palm oil, and rosin; and soft soap, in which the alkali is potash, combined with fatty acids derived usually from whale or seal oil, or tallow.
The common soft soaps contain an excess of alkali, which adds to their detergent powers, and they usually contain the glycerine of the fat diffused through them. Miller. Kane.—Most soaps contain a large proportion of water. Olive oil soaps are composed of a mixture of margarate and oleate of soda. The fixed alkaline soaps are harder the more stearate and margarate they contain, and softer when the oleate predominates. Wood & Bache.

Castile soap, or Spanish soap, a soap made from olive oil and soda, and mottled by the addition of green vitriol and sulphuretted ley to the soap while in the pasty state. Miller.—Insoluble soaps, compounds, without detergent properties, resulting from the combination of fatty acids with metallic oxides; as soap of the protoxide of lead, or lead plaster, and the soap of lime or lime liniment;—also called me- talhe and earthy soaps, and chiefly used in pharmacy.

—Lime soap, a name applied to insoluble compounds, without detergent properties, of fatty acids and lime.
—Palm soap, a soap prepared from soda and palm oil, with the addition of tallow to give it fineness.
—Windsor soap, a scented soap made of soda with one part of olive oil and nine parts of tallow. *Wood &

SÖAP'-BÜB-BLE, n. A thin film of soapy water inflated into a spherical form. Brewster.

The black spot seen at the highest point of a soap-bubble, and the gorgeous tints of color seen in other parts of it, are due to the interference of rays reflected from its inner and outer surfaces. The thickness of the soap-bubble at the black spot is the 600,000th part of an inch. Young.

SÖAP'-CÉ-RATE, n. A substance prepared from subacetate of lead, soap, white wax, and olive oil,—used as a sedative in external inflammation. Wood & Bache.

SÖAP'NÜT, n. A name for the seed of Mimosa abstergens. Simmonds.

SÖAP'STÖNE, n. (Min.) 1. A very sectile, massive, generally granular variety of steatite, quite greasy to the feel, or like soap, of a coarse-gray or grayish-green color,—also of fine texture, occasionally yellowish or reddish, sometimes lamellar, but usually compact, and composed chiefly of silica and magnesia; steatite. Dana.

Soapstone may be used into slabs, turned in a lathe, or formed into tubes by boring. It is used for stoves and fireplaces, for firestones in furnaces and stoves, and, when ground, for diminishing friction, and also in the manufacture of some kinds of porcelain. Dana. Abbott.

2. Another name for saponite.—See SAPO-NITE. Dana.

BED; pp. SOBING, SOBED.] To heave the breast audibly with convulsive sorrow; to sigh convulsively; to lament; to weep.

He twenty times made pause to sob and weep. Shak.

SÖB, n. A spasmodic, sudden, and momentary contraction of the diaphragm, immediately followed by relaxation, by which the little air that the contraction has caused to enter the chest is driven out with noise,—an evidence of corporeal or mental suffering; a convulsive sigh; audible expression of grief or sorrow. Pope.

The sigh differs from the sob, the latter being involuntary. Dunglison.

† SÖB, v. a. To soak; to sop. [Cant.] Mortimer.

SÖB'BING, n. The act, or the sound, of one who sobs. "Hoarse sobbings." Drummond.

SÖ'CIAL-ÏSM (sö'shal-izm), n. [Fr. sociálisme.] The science of reconstructing society on entirely new bases, by substituting the principle of association for that of competition in every branch of human industry. Brande.

Syn.—In the various forms under which society has existed, private property, individual industry and enterprise, and the right of marriage and the family, have been recognized. Of late years, several schemes of social arrangement have been proposed, in which one or all of these principles have been abandoned or modified. These schemes may be comprehended under the general term of socialism. The motto of them all is solidarité, or fellowship and mutual responsibility.—Communism demands a community of goods or property. Fourierism, or Philanthropism, is the system of Charles Fourier, who advocated the plan of reorganizing society into so many phalansteries, containing each from 500 to 2000 persons, upon principles similar to those of joint-stock companies; the members to live in one spacious edifice, cultivating a common domain, the proceeds to be shared according to the amount of capital, skill, or labor invested by each. Saint Simonism, or Humanitarianism, is the system of Claude Henri, Count de Saint Simon, who thought that the present evils of society were to be remedied by a just division of the fruits of common labor between its members. After his death his disciples formed an association, called the St. Simonian family, which, after the French revolution of 1830, rose rapidly into notoriety and favor. With the notions common to many other social reformers the members of this association united the doctrine that the division of the goods of the community should be in due proportion to the merits or capacity of the recipient, and the government of the society was to be intrusted to a hierarchy consisting of a supreme pontiff, apostles, and disciples of the first, second, and third order. Practical difficulties arose in carrying the scheme into execution, and, in 1832, the association was dispersed by the French government on account of their immoral and licentious practices. Fleming. Ogilvie. Brande.

SÖ'CIAL-ÏST, n. [Fr. sociálisme.] An advocate of socialism. Ch. Ob.

SQ-CÏ'E-TY, n. [L. societas; socius, a companion; It. società; Sp. sociedad; Fr. société.]

1. Union of many in one general interest; numbers united in one interest; community.

A commonwealth is called a society or common doing of a multitude of persons united together and united by common accord and covenant among themselves. St. Smith.

2. A number of persons united together by mutual consent, in order to deliberate, determine, and act jointly for some common purpose; an association formed for the promotion of some object, either literary, religious, benevolent, political, or convivial; as, the societies or academies for promoting the cause of literature; charitable societies, or purposes of public charity; missionary societies, for sending missionaries abroad.

Societates are either incorporated and known to the law, or unincorporated, of which the law does not generally take notice. Associations formed for commercial purposes are usually styled companies or partnerships. Societates formed for convivial or political purposes, are most usually denominated clubs. Bowdler. Brande.

3. Social sympathy; companionship; fellowship; company; converse.

For solitude sometimes is best society: A short retirement urges sweet return. Milton.

There is society where none pretend. Byron.

Civil society, a state; a nation; a body politic. Bowdler.

Syn.—Society is a more general term than company, and is of extensive application; as a scientific, literary, religious, political, or benevolent society; the Royal Society; the Historical Society; a commercial company, the East India Company; a military company; partnership in trade; the general community. A person is said to be fond of society or fond of company.—See ASSOCIATION.

SÖ'LÄR, a. [L. solaris; sol, solis, the sun; It. solare; Sp. solar; Fr. solaire.]
1. Pertaining to, proceeding from, or resembling the sun; sunny.
His soul proud science never taught to stray
Far as the solar walk or milky way. Pope.
2. Measured by the sun. "Any day of any solar month." Holder.
3. Born under, or in, the predominant influence of the sun. "Solar people." Dryden.
4. Produced by the action of the sun; as, "Solar salt."
Solar apex, the point in space, situated in the constellation Hercules, towards which the sun is moving. Herschel. — Solar flowers (Bot.) flowers which open and shut daily at certain hours. Wright. — Solar cycle, (Astron.) a period of twenty-eight Julian years, after the lapse of which the same days of the week, on the Julian system, would always return to the same days of each month throughout the year. The place of any year A. D., as, 1859, in this cycle is found by adding 9 to the year and dividing by 28. The remainder is the number sought. Herschel. — Solar eclipse, the partial or total disappearance of the sun's disk in consequence of the moon passing between the sun and the earth. — Total solar eclipse, a solar eclipse in which the whole of the sun's disk disappears for a short time. — Partial solar eclipse, a solar eclipse in which only a part of the sun's disk disappears. — Annular solar eclipse, a solar eclipse in which the edge of the sun appears for a few minutes as a narrow ring of light, projecting on all sides beyond the dark circle occupied by the moon in its centre. Herschel. — Solar day, the interval of time between two successive arrivals of the sun on the same meridian. The actual solar day is never two days in succession of the same length. — Mean solar day, the average of all the solar days throughout the year. — Solar year, the year as measured by the apparent motion of the sun in the heavens. It is either astronomical or civil. Hutton. — Astronomical solar year, the year which is determined precisely by astronomical observations. It is of two kinds, tropical and sidereal; the former being the time the sun takes in passing through the twelve signs of the zodiac, and the latter, the time between two successive returns of the sun to the same star. Hutton. — Civil solar year, a solar year consisting of an exact or integral number of days, as determined by civil governments. It is among civilized nations, at the present time, the same as the Julian year, consisting of 365 days, with an additional day every fourth year. Hutton. — Solar month, the time in which the sun passes through one entire sign of the ecliptic. Hutton. — Civil solar month, same as civil or calendar month. — Solar spots, large, irregular, black spots visible occasionally on the disk of the sun, generally on two zones parallel to its equator, of changing forms and dimensions, being sometimes at least 45,000 miles in diameter, and indicating by their motion from east to west a rotation of the sun about its axis, — supposed to be caused by the displacement of the upper and luminous strata of the sun's atmosphere by ascending portions of the subjacent, non-luminous, transparent strata, whereby the dark, solid body of the sun is exposed to view. Herschel — Solar microscope, a microscope for producing on a screen or wall, in a darkened room, highly magnified images of minute objects illuminated by reflected solar rays. It is composed essentially, in its most simple form, of a plain mirror and two converging lenses. The mirror, being placed on the outside of a window shutter, and capable of being adjusted according to the direction of the sun, reflects through an aperture in it a beam of solar light which is concentrated upon the object by the first lens. The object being thus strongly illuminated and situated a little before the focus of the second lens, an inverted, highly magnified image of it is formed on the screen. In many forms of the instrument, there are additional parts, as a second mirror, a third lens, &c. Farrar. — Solar system, a name applied to the sun and the various bodies that revolve around it. Herschel. — Solar phosphori, a name applied to certain bodies which have the property of absorbing the rays of light, of retaining them for some time, and of again evolving them unchanged, and unaccompanied by sensible heat, as the diamond, putrid fish. Henry.

SÖ'LÄR, n. A solar. — See SOLLÄR. Britton.

SÖ-LÄR-I-ZÄ'TION, n. (Photography.) A term denoting the injurious effects produced upon photographic pictures by too long exposure to the action of light in the camera, as indistinctness of outline, obliteration of the high lights, loss of relief, &c. Whipple.

SÖ'LÄR-IZE, v. n. (Photography.) To become injured by too long exposure to the action of light in the camera. — See SOLARIZATION. Whipple.

SÖLD, n. [It. soldo; Sp. sueldo; Fr. solde. — Ger. sold.] (Mil.) Military pay; the wages of a soldier. Spenser Stocqueler.

† SÖL-DÄ'DÖ, n. [Sp.] A soldier. Marston.

SÖL'DAN [söl'dän, S. P. Ja. Sm. R. Wr. IVb.; söl'dän, W. J. F. K.], n. A sultan. Milton.

† SÖL'DA-NËL, n. [Low L. soldanella.] (Bot.) A plant of the genus Soldanella. Miller.

SÖL'DA-NËL'LA, n. (Bot.) A genus of alpine plants with round leaves, and remarkable for the manner in which their corolla is cut or lacerated. Loudon.

|| SÖL'DER (söl'der or säw'der) [söl'der, W. P. J. Ja. R.; säw'der, K. Sm. C.; söl'der or säw'der, Ja. Wr.; söl'der, S.; söl'der, F.], v. a. [L. solido, to make solid, to fasten together; solidus, solid; It. soldare, soldare, to solder; Sp. soldar; Fr. souder.] [i. SOLDERED; pp. SOLDERING, SOLDERED.] To unite or fasten, as the edges or surfaces of metals, by partial fusion, or by the insertion of an alloy which is more fusible than the metals to be united; to cement; to solder; — often written soder. — See SODER. Tomlinson.

“Dr. Johnson seems to favor writing this word without the l, as it is sometimes pronounced; but the many examples he has brought, where it is spelt with l, show sufficiently how much this orthography is established. — Though our orthoepists agree in leaving out the l, they differ in pronouncing the o. Sheridan sounds the o as in sod; W. Johnston as in sober; and Mr. Nares as the diphthong aw. Mr. Smith says that Mr. Walker pronounces the l in this word, but every workman pronounces it as rhyming with fodder; to which it may be answered, that workmen ought to take their pronunciation from scholars, and not scholars from workmen.” Walker

|| SÖL'DER (söl'der or säw'der), n. An alloy for uniting the edges or surfaces of metals, which is more fusible than the metals to be united; soder. Tomlinson.

|| SÖL'DER-ER (söl'der-er or säw'der-er), n. One who solders. Johnson.

|| SÖL'DER-ING, n. The act or the process of uniting the edges or surfaces of metals by means of solder. Tomlinson.

SÖL'DIER (söl'jer), n. [It. soldato; Sp. soldado; Old Fr. soudoyer, soudier; Fr. soldat. — Dut. soldaat; Ger., Dan., & Sw. soldat. — Some refer this word to L. soldurn, retainers of a chieftain; others to L. solidus or soldus, the pay of a soldier. — See SÖLD, n.]

1. A man employed in the military service of a sovereign or of a state; a member of a military company or of an army; a fighting man; — a warrior.

Full of strange oaths, and hoarse, like a parrot, he swore that he was a soldier. Shak.

2. A member of a military company who is not an officer; a common soldier; a private.

It were meet that any one, before he came to be a captain, should have been a soldier. Spenser.

“In its limited acceptation, the word means a common soldier, but in its more enlarged sense, it comprehends every grade from the private to the general officer.” Mil. Encyc.

SÖLE, v. a. [i. SOLED; pp. SOLING, SOLED.] To furnish with a sole, or with soles. Swift.

I soled my shoes with wood.

SÖLE, a. [L. solus; It. & Sp. solo; Fr. seul.] 1. Single; only; alone; solitary; individual; without any other; unaccompanied.

To do aught good never will be our task, But ever to do ill our sole delight. Milton.

2. (Law.) Composed of a single person. “A sole corporation.” Bouvier. — Unmarried. Ayliffe.
Syn. — See SOLITARY.

SÖL'F-CÏSM, n. [Gr. σολοικισμός; σόλοικος, speaking incorrectly; It. & Sp. solecismo; Fr. solécisme; — said to come from the corruption of the Attic dialect among the Athenian colonists of Soli in Cilicia.]

1. (Rhet.) An offence against the rules of grammar by the use of words in a wrong construction; false syntax. Waterland.

Modern grammarians designate by solecism any word or expression which does not agree with the established usage of writing or speaking. But as customs change, that which at one time is considered a solecism, may at another be regarded as correct language. A solecism, therefore, differs from a barbarism, inasmuch as the latter consists in the use of a word or expression which is altogether contrary to the spirit of the language, and can, properly speaking, never become established as correct language. P. Cyc.

2. Any unfitness, incongruity, or impropriety. It is the solecism of power to think to command the end, and yet not endure the means. Bacon.

Syn. — See BARBARISM.

SÖL'F-CÏST, n. [Gr. σολοικιστής.] One who commits a solecism. Blackwall.

SÖN (sün), n. [M. Goth. sumus; A. S. sumn, sune; Dut. soon; Ger. sohn; Dan. sen; Sw. son; Icel. sonr.—Polish, Russ., &c., syn.—Sansc. sun.]

to draw out the nouns and verbs as they stand in Johnson's Dictionary:—

Nouns, &c.	Verbs.	Nouns, &c.	Verbs.
Bath,	to bathe.	Sheath,	to sheath, sheathe.
Breath,	to breathe.	Smooth,	to smooth.
Cloth,	to clothe.	Swath,	to swath.
Cloth,	to uncloath.	Wreath,	to wreath.
Loath,	to loathe.		to unwreath.
Mouth,	to mouth.

Surely nothing can be more evident than the analogy of the language in this case. Is it not absurd to hesitate a moment at writing all the verbs with a final s? This is a departure from our great lexicographer which he himself would approve, as nothing but inadvertency could have led him into this unmeaning irregularity." Walker.

Although Walker speaks so decidedly on this matter, yet he has not accommodated the orthography of all these words to the principle which he inculcates. It could be wished that all the words of this class were conformed in their orthography to this rule. The only ones which are not now actually, by respectable usage, conformed to it, are the verbs to bequeath, to mouth, and to smooth, which we rarely see written to bequeathe, to mouthe, and to smoothe.

Syn.—See ALLAY, APPEASE.

SÔÔTH'ER, n. One who soothes or flatters. Shak.

fully; sôphōs, wise; L. sôphisma; It. sôfismo; Sp. sôfisma; Fr. sôphisme.] A specious, but fallacious, argument; a fallacy, deception, or subtlety in argument or reasoning; paralogism.

When a false argument puts on the appearance of a true one, it is a sôphism. Watts.

"A sôphism is a false argument. This word is not usually applied to mere errors in reasoning, but only to those erroneous reasonings of the fallacy of which the person who maintained them is, in some degree, conscious; and which he endeavors to conceal from examination by subtlety and by some ambiguity, or other unfairness in the use of words." Taylor.

Syn.—See PARALOGISM.

SÔPH'IST (sôf'ist), n. [Gr. sôphistēs; L. sôphistes; It. & Sp. sôfista; Fr. sôphiste.]

1. In ancient Greece, one who gave lessons in the arts and sciences for money. Temple.

"If the earlier sôphists are to be blamed rather for false display than for actual false intention, their trade soon became that of perverting and opposing truth, as such, and in this character, being attacked by Socrates and Plato, as also by Aristophanes and others, they fell into deserved odium." Liddell & Scott.

2. A specious, but fallacious, reasoner; a disputant fallaciously subtle; an artful, but insidious, logician. Wright.

3. A sophister. [Camb. Univ., Eng.] Crabb.

The words sôphist and sôphister are sometimes confounded, the proper sense of the former being a teacher of philosophy in ancient Greece, of the latter, a specious, but false reasoner. Dr. Campbell.

SÔPH'Q-MÔRE, n. [Gr. sôphōs, wise, and môros, dull, foolish.—"The freshman's year [in Cambridge University, Eng.] being expired, the next distinctive appellation conferred is A sôph Mor. . . Is not Mor an abbreviation of the Gr. Môphia [folly], and might not this quaint title have been introduced at a time when the Encomium Morie, the Praise of Folly, of Erasmus, was so generally read that ten editions of it speedily issued from the press? It is worthy of notice, that near the beginning of this admirable treatise the word μωροσôφης, foolishly wise, occurs, and it is obvious that Sôph Mor is only a transposition of the word, with a curtailing of the former part of it." Gent. Mag. vol. lxx. 1795, p. 818.] A student belonging to the second class, or class next above the freshman class, in a college, or who is in the second year of his collegiate course. [U. The species of the letters illuminated with indigo and violet appeared so confused and indistinct that I could not find them. Norton.

2. An assemblage of individuals allied by common characters, and subordinate to a genus or a sub-genus; a group. Bentley.

In zoology and botany, species is founded on identity of form and structure, both external and internal. The principal characteristic of species, in animals and vegetables, is the power to produce beings like themselves, who are also productive. A species may be modified by external influences, and thus give rise to races or varieties, but it never abandons its own proper character to assume another. In mineralogy species is determined, according to some writers, by identity of physical properties, as specific gravity, hardness, &c.; according to others by perfect identity of chemical composition, the natural properties going for nothing. In some mineralogical systems, the term genus is dropped, and the species is made subordinate to the order or the section. Prichard Shepard, Dana.

3. Kind; sort; description.

[Gainsborough] invented a new species or dramatic painting, in which, probably, he will never be equalled. Reynolds

4. † A spectacle; a public show.

SPÉRM, n. [Gr. σπέρμα; σπέρω, to sow; L. & It. sperma; Sp. esperma; Fr. sperme.]

1. The fecundating principle in animals; semen; the spermatic fluid or liquor. Dunglison.
 2. A substance obtained from the head of some species of whales; — incorrectly used for spermacti. Dunglison.
 3. Spawn of fish, &c. Bailey.

SPÉR-MA-CÉ'TI [sper-ma-sé'te, W. P. F. Ja. Sm.; sper-ma-sit'e, S. J. E. K.], n. [Gr. σπέρμα, sperm, and κητός, a whale; Fr. sperme, a solid crystalline fat extracted from the head of the sperm whale or blunt-headed cachelot (Catodon macrocephalus), where it exists in a fluid state accompanied by oil (sperm oil), from which it concretes after death; — used for candles. Baird. P. Cyc.

Spermacti differs from the ordinary fats in not yielding glycerine when saponified, but in its stead a different base, termed ethyl. Pure spermacti, or cetine, fuses at about 120° Fahrenheit, and solidifies to a silky, semi-transparent, crystalline fat of delicate whiteness. Müller.

SPÉR-MA-CÉ'TI, a. Relating to, or made of, spermacti. Armstrong.

SPÉR-MA-CÉ'TI-WHÁLE, n. (Zool.) A species of whale from which spermacti is obtained; Catodon macrocephalus; — called also sperm-whale, and blunt-headed cachelot. Baird.

SPÉRM'A-PHÓRE, n. [Gr. σπέρμα, sperm, and φέρω, to bear.] (Bot.) The placenta. Clarke.

SPÉR-MÁT'IC, a. [Gr. σπέρματικός; L. sperma-ticus; It. spermaticeo; Sp. espermatico; Fr. spermatique.] Relating to, or consisting of, sperm; seminal. Ray.

† SPÉR-MA-TÍZE, v. n. [Gr. σπέρματιζω.] To yield seed; to throw out sperm. Browne.

SPÉR-MÁT'O-CÉLE [sper-mát'o-sél, W. K. Sm. Wb.; sper-ma-to-sél, Ja.], n. [Gr. σπέρμα, sperm, and κήλη, a tumor; Fr. spermatocèle.] (Med.) A varicose dilatation of the veins of the scrotum and spermatic cord; varicocele. Dunglison.

SPÉR-MA-TÖID, a. [Gr. σπέρμα, sperm, and εἶδος, form.] (Zool.) Similar to sperm. Dunglison.

SPÉR-MA-TÖL'O-GY, n. [Gr. σπέρμα, sperm, and λογος, a discourse; Fr. spermatologie.] A treatise on sperm. Dunglison.

SPÉRM'A-TQ-PHÓRE, n. [Gr. σπέρμα, σπέρματος, sperm, and φέρω, to bear.] (Zool.) One of the tubular sheaths which, in some animals, are secreted around the masses of spermatozoa whilst contained in the seminal apparatus. Micrographic Dict.

SPÉR-MA-TÖPH'O-ROÜS, a. [Gr. σπέρμα, sperm, and φέρω, to bear.] (Zool.) Bearing sperm; seminiferous. Dunglison.

SPÉR-MA-TQ-ZÖ'A, n. pl. [Gr. σπέρμα, sperm, and ζῶν, an animal.] (Zool.) Minute bodies, reputed formerly to be animalcules, seen in the sperm, and considered by physiologists to be essential to impregnation. Brande.

The form of the spermatozoa varies in different animals, but they usually consist of a rounded or oval body or head, at one end of which is appended a movable filament. Micrographic Dict.

More properly called spermatozooids, for their animalcular nature is not demonstrated. Dunglison.

SPÉR-MA-TQ-ZÖ'ID, n. [Gr. σπέρμα, sperm, and εἶδος, form.]

1. (Phys.) One of the reputed animalcules seen in sperm. Dunglison.

2. (Bot.) One of the vegetable filaments produced in the organs called Antheridia, and which exist in the plants of many cryptogamous families, regarded as analogous to the spermatozoa of animals, and as the agents of fertilization of the germ-cell. Micrographic Dict.

SPÉR-MA-TQ-ZÖ'QN, n. One of the spermatozoa. Micrographic Dict.

SPÉR-MÍD'I-ÜM, n. [Gr. σπέρμα, sperm.] (Bot.) A one-seeded, one-celled, superior, indehiscent, hard, dry fruit, with the integuments of the seed distinct from it; achenium. Lindley.

SPÉRM'-ÖIL, n. Oil from the sperm-whale.

SPÉR-MÖL'O-GÝST, n. [Gr. σπέρμαλόγος.] One who gathers or treats of seeds. [R.] Bailey.

SPÉRM'-WHÁLE, n. Spermacti-whale. Baird.

† SPÉRSE, v. a. To disperse; to scatter. Spenser.

† SPÉT, v. a. To spit. — n. Spittle. Milton.

SPÉTCH'ES, n. pl. Scraps of glue: — the offal of skins and hides. Simmonds.

SPEW (spá), v. a. [Goth. speiwan; A. S. spewian; Dut. spugen; Ger. speien; Dan. spye; Icel. spya; Sw. spy. — Gr. πνιω, to spit out; L. spuo. — See SPIT.] [i. SPEWED; pp. SPEWING, SPEWED.] [Written also spue.]
 1. To eject from the mouth; to vomit; to cast up; to puke; to eject with loathing.
 Therewith she spewed out of her filthy maw
 A flood of poison horrible and black. Spenser.
 2. To eject; to cast forth. Dryden.

Contentious suits ought to be spewed out, as the surfeit of courts. Bacon.

SPEW (spá), v. n. 1. To vomit. B. Jonson.

2. To swell, as wet land affected by frost so as to throw seed out of the ground; as, "The ground spews."

SPEW'ER (spá'er), n. One who spews. Todd.

SPEW'ING, n. The act of vomiting. Hab. ii. 16.

SPEW'Y, a. Disposed to swell, as wet land affected by frost, so as to throw seed out of the ground. [Local, Eng., and U. S.] Mortimer.

SPHÁC'E-LÁTE (sfás'e-lát), v. a. [i. SPHACELATED; pp. SPHACELATING, SPHACELATED.] To affect with sphacelus or gangrene. Sharp.

SPHÁC'E-LÁTE (sfás'e-lát), v. n. To mortify; to suffer gangrene. Sharp.

SPHÁC'E-LÁTE, a. Affected with sphacelus; SPHÁC'E-LÁT-ED, a. mortified. Clarke.

SPHÁC'E-LÜS (sfás-), n. [Gr. σφάκελος; It. sfacelo; Sp. esfacelo; Fr. sphacèle.] (Med.) The disorganized portion in cases of mortification.

"This word is used by some synonymously with gangrene; by others, with gangrene when it occupies the whole substance of a limb. Sphacelus was formerly used to denote excessive pain; and for agitation from excessive pain or violent emotion." Dunglison.

SPHÆR'U-LITE, n. (Min.) See SPHERULITE.

SPHÁG'NOÜS, a. Relating to plants of the genus Sphagnum; mossy. Clarke.

SPHÁG'NÜM, n. [Gr. σφάγνος, a kind of fragrant lichen.] (Bot.) A genus of the natural order of mosses, growing mostly in bogs, and constituting the principal portion of peat; peat-moss; bog-moss. Gray.

SPHÈNE, n. [Gr. σφην, a wedge.] A brittle mineral of various colors, sometimes crystallized, transparent, and also opaque, and consisting of silica, titanic acid, and lime; — so called in allusion to the form of its crystals. Dana.

SPHÈN'-[S-CI'NÆ, n. pl. (Ornith.) A sub-family of birds of the order Anseres and family Alcedæ; penguins. Gray.

Spheniscus demersus.

SPHÈ'NÖID, a. [Gr. σφην, a wedge, and εἶδος, form; Fr. sphénoïde.] (Anat.) Wedge-shaped. Sphenoid bone, an azygous bone situated on the median line, and at the base of the cranium; pterygoid bone. Dunglison.

SPHÈ'NÖID, n. [Fr. sphénoïde.] (Anat.) The sphenoid bone. Dunglison.

SPHÈ'NÖID'AL, a. (Anat.) Relating to or belonging to the sphenoid bone. Dunglison.

SPHÈ'NQ-MÁX'IL-LÁ-RY, a. (Anat.) Pertaining to the sphenoid and maxillary bones. Dunglison.

SPHÈ'NQ-PÁL'A-TINE, a. (Anat.) Pertaining to the sphenoid and palate bones. Dunglison.

SPHÈ'NQ-PÁ-RÍ'E-TAL, a. (Anat.) Pertaining to the sphenoid and parietal bones. Dunglison.

SPHÈ'NQ-TÉM'PO-RAL, a. (Anat.) Pertaining to the sphenoid and temporal bones. Dunglison.

SPHERE (sfer), n. [Gr. σφαῖρα; L. sphæra; It. sfera; Sp. esfera; Fr. sphère.]

1. Any orbicular body, solid or hollow; an orb; a globe; a ball.

That labor on the bottom of this sphere. Shak.

2. (Geom.) A solid or volume bounded by a surface, every point of which is equally distant from a point within, called the centre; a solid that may be generated by the revolution of a semicircle about its diameter as an axis. Da. & P.

3. (Astron.) The concave expanse of the heavens, which appears to the eye as the interior surface of a sphere, and in which the sun, moon, planets, stars, and comets appear to be fixed at an equal distance from the eye;—called, also, the sphere of the world. Hutton.

The single sea is now civil of the sphere. Shak.

In the Ptolemaic system, spheres were supposed to be transparent spherical surfaces, moving about a common centre, independently of each other, and each carrying with it one of the heavenly luminaries.

4. (Geog.) A representation of the earth on the surface of a globe, which has also represented on it an assemblage of circles showing the positions of the equator, ecliptic, meridians, &c. Brande.

5. A socket; an orbit.

Every man, versed in any particular business, finds fault with these authors so far as they treat of matters within his sphere. Addison.

6. Circuit, circle, or compass of knowledge, action, or influence; province.

Many more [vegetable productions] might be had from the narrow sphere of our researches. Cook.

Armillary sphere, (Astron.) an astronomical instrument representing the principal circles of the sphere in their relative order and position, and serving to resolve various problems in astronomy. Hutton.—Oblique sphere, a sphere in which, as in those parts of the earth which are intermediate between the equator and the poles, the circles of apparent daily revolution of the heavenly bodies are oblique to the horizon. — Parallel sphere, a sphere in which, as at the poles, the circles of apparent daily revolution of the heavenly bodies are parallel to the horizon. — Right or direct sphere, a sphere in which, as at the equatorial parts of the earth, the circles of apparent daily revolution described by the heavenly bodies are at right angles to the horizon.

SPHERE, v. a. [i. SPHERED; pp. SPHERING, SPHERED.]

1. To place in a sphere.

And therefore is the glorious planet Sol In noble eminence enthroned and spher'd Amidst the other. Shak.

2. To make round. "[Light] spher'd in a radiant cloud." Milton.

SPHERE'-BORN, a. Born of, or among, the spheres. Milton.

SPHERE'-DE-SCEND'ED, a. Descended from the spheres. Collins.

SPHERE'-MEL-O-DY, n. The melody or music of the spheres. Clarke.

SPHER'IC, } a. [Gr. σφαῖρικός; σφαῖρα, a ball; *SPHER'I-CAL, } L. sphaericus; It. sferico; Sp. esferico, Fr. sphérique.]*

1. Pertaining to a sphere; orbicular; globular.

We must know the reason of the spherical figures of the drops. Glennell.

2. † Planetary. "Villains by spherical predominance." Shak.

Spherical angle, an angle included between the arcs of two great circles intersecting each other on the surface of a sphere. — Spherical coordinates, trigonometrical coordinates. — Spherical excess, the excess of the sum of the three angles of a spherical triangle over 180°. — Spherical geometry, that department of geometry which treats of the sphere, particularly of the circles described on its surface. Hutton. — Spherical lune, a portion of the surface of a sphere included between two great semicircles having a common diameter. — Spherical polygon, a portion of the surface of a sphere bounded by arcs of three or more great circles. — Spherical projections. See PROJECTION. — Spherical pyramid, a portion of a sphere bounded by a spherical polygon and by three or more sectors of great circles meeting at the centre of a sphere. — Spherical sector, a portion of a sphere which may be generated by the revolution of a sector of a circle about a straight line passing through its vertex as an axis. — Spherical segment, a portion of a sphere included between a zone of the surface and a secant plane or between two parallel secant planes. — Spherical triangle, a spherical polygon of three sides, being a portion of the surface of a sphere bounded by the arcs of three great circles. — Spherical trigonometry, that branch of trigonometry which explains the method of solving spherical triangles where three of the parts are given. It also treats of the general relations existing between the six parts of which the triangle is composed. — Spherical ungula, a portion of a sphere bounded by a lune and two semicircles meeting in a diameter of the sphere. — Spherical zone, a portion of the surface of a sphere included between two parallel planes. Da. & P.

SPHER'I-CAL-LY, ad. In the form of a sphere.

SPHER'I-CAL-NESS, n. The quality of being spherical; sphericity. Digby.

SPHE-RĪC'Ī-TY (sfē-rīs'e-te), n. [Gr. σφαῖρα, a ball, a sphere; It. sfericità; Sp. esfericidad; Fr. sphéricité.] The quality of being spherical; roundness; globosity; roundness.

It will not of itself recover its sphericity. Boyle.

Syn.—See ROTUNDITY.

SPHER'I-CLE (sfēr'e-kl), n. A small sphere. Clarke.

SPHER'ICS (sfēr'iks), n. The doctrine of the properties of the sphere; spherical trigonometry. Brande.

SPHE-RŌID (sfēr'ōid) [sfēr'ōid, S. W. P. J. F. K.; sfēr'ōid, Ja. Sm. C.], n. [Gr. σφαῖροειδής, spherical, σφαῖρα, a sphere, and ειδός, form; L. sphaeroides, spherical; Fr. sphéroïde.] A solid resembling a sphere in form, and which may be generated by the revolution of an ellipse about one of its axes. Davies & Peck.

If an ellipse is revolved about its transverse axis, the spheroid generated is called a prolate spheroid; if it is revolved about its conjugate axis, the spheroid generated is called an oblate spheroid. Davies & Peck.

SPHE-RŌID'AL (sfēr'ōid'al),

SPHE-RŌID'IC (sfēr'ōid'ik),

SPHE-RŌID'I-CAL (sfēr'ōid'e-kal),

1. Having the form of a spheroid. Adams.

2. (Crystallography.) Noting crystals bounded by several convex faces, as one variety of the diamond, which has forty-eight faces. Cleveland.

Spheroidal state, (Physics.) a state assumed by a small quantity of water on falling upon a metallic capsule heated to between 300° and 400° F., in which it rolls about in a spheroidal mass without being heated to the boiling point,—an effect due to the prevention of contact by the repulsion of the heated metal and by the intervening layer or cushion of non-conducting steam, and also to the cooling influence of evaporation. On removing the source of heat, the liquid soon boils vehemently, and is dispersed in steam, with a loud, hissing noise. Instead of a capsule, a metallic plate may be used. Other liquids are affected in like manner. The temperature of the spheroid of water is about 205° F., that of the spheroid of ether about 94°, and that of the spheroid of sulphurous acid 14° or 18° below the freezing point of water,—so that, if a little water is dropped into a spheroid of sulphurous acid, contained in a red-hot capsule, it is instantly frozen. Müller.

SPHE-RŌID'I-TY, n. The state or the quality of being spheroidal. Mason.

SPHE-RŌM'E-TER, n. [Gr. σφαῖρα, a sphere, and μετρον, a measure; Fr. sphéromètre.] An instrument for measuring with great precision the thickness of small bodies, the curvature of optical glasses, &c. Hoblyn.

SPHER-Q-SID'ER-ITE, n. (Min.) A variety of fibrous carbonate of iron, the fibres of which radiate and form a mammelated surface. Brooke.

SPHER'U-LATE, a. Having one or more rows of minute tubercles. Maunder.

SPHER'ŪLE (sfēr'ūl), n. [L. sphaerula, dim. of sphaera, a sphere.] A little sphere.

2. Belonging to the spheres. "The sphyry chime." Milton.

SPHIG-MŌM'E-TER, n. Sphygmometer. Brande.

SPHINC'TER (sfing'k'ter, 82), n. [Gr. σφινγω, to contract.] (Anat.) A name given to several an-nular muscles, which constrict or close certain natural openings. Dunghlson.

SPHINX (sfingks, 82), n. [Gr. σφίγξ; L. sphinx.] The usual derivation is from Gr. σφίγγω, to bind tight, as if the Throttler. Liddell & Scott. A fabulous being occurring in the mythology of Greece, Egypt, and India. P. Cyc.

Grecian sphinxes were portrayed in different ways, but their figure was always a compound of the animal and the human form. The sphinx which occurs in the early legends of Thebes is usually represented with the head of a woman and the body of a lion. The Egyptian sphinxes are lions without wings, and are represented in a recumbent position, like those of Greece; the upper part of their body is either human, and mostly female, or they have the head of a ram. Sphinxes are also found in India as ornaments of temples, but they are always represented with the head of a man. P. Cyc.

SPHRAG'IDE, n. [L. sphragis, spragidis, Lemnian earth,—so called because anciently sold in sealed parcels; from Gr. σφραγίς, σφραγίδος, a seal.] (Min.) A yellowish-gray earth or clay, speckled with red, called Lemnian earth.

SPHRA-GŪS'TICS, n. pl. [Gr. σφραγίς, a seal.] (Diplomatics.) The science of seals, their history, peculiarities, and distinctions, especially with a view to the means which they afford of ascertaining the age and genuineness of documents to which they are affixed. Brande.

SPHŪ'G-MIC, a. [Gr. σφυγμικός, σφυγμός, the pulse.] Pertaining to the pulse. Wright.

SPHYG-MŌM'E-TER, n. [Gr. σφυγμός, the pulse, σφύζω, to throb, and μετρον, measure.] (Med.) An instrument for measuring the force of the pulse. Dunghlson.

† SPĪ'AL, n. A spy; a watch. Bacon.

SPĪ'CA, n. [L.] 1. (Bot.) A spike. Henslow.

2. (Med.) A bandage, so called because somewhat resembling a spike of barley. Dunghlson.

3. (Astron.) A star of the first magnitude in the constellation Virgo. Young.

SPĪ'CATE, } a. [L. spico, spiratus, to furnish with spikes.] (Bot.) Belonging to, or disposed in, a spike. Gray.

SPĪ'CĀT-ED, } with spikes.]

SPIC-CĀ'TŌ, n. [It.] (Mus.) A word denoting that the notes over which it is placed are to be performed in a distinct manner. Moore.

SPICE, n. [L. species, spices, drugs, &c., of the same sort; It. spezie; Sp. especia; Fr. épice.] 1. † Species. Chaucer. Wicliffe.

2. Any pungent aromatic vegetable substance used for seasoning food, as pepper, nutmeg, ginger, cinnamon, cloves, &c.; condiment. Baker.

3. A small portion or quantity, sufficient to give flavor or pungency; a grain; a particle.

Too busy senates, with an over-care To make us better than our kind can bear, Have dashed a spice of envy in the laws. Dryden.

SPICE, v. a. [i. SPICED; pp. SPICING, SPICED.]

1. To season with spice; to mix with pungent aromatic vegetable substances; to pepper.

Spiced syllabubs and cider of the best. Drayton.

2. To render fragrant or redolent with spices. "The spiced Indian air." Shak.

3. To render nice, delicate, or dainty. Take it; 'tis yours.

Be not so spiced; it is good gold. Beau. & Fl.

SPICE'-ĀP-PLE, n. The name of an apple. Ash.

SPICE'-BŪSH, n. (Bot.) A species of wild all-spice; spice-wood; Benzoin odoriferum. Gray.

SPĪ'CER, n. One who spices, or one who deals in spices. "A spicer or grocer." Fabyan.

SPĪ'CER-Y, n. [Old Fr. espicerie; Fr. épicerie.] 1. Spices collectively. "Their camels were laden with spicery." Raleigh.

2. A repository of spices. The spicery, the cellar, and its furniture, are too well known to be here insisted upon. Addison.

SPICE'-WOOD (wūd), n. (Bot.) A deciduous shrub, from six to twelve feet high, found in moist woods in Canada and the United States; fever-bush; Benjamin-tree; Benzoin odoriferum, or Laurus benzoin of Linnaeus;—so called from the spicy taste of the bark. Wood.

SPI'C-I-FÓRM, a. [L. spica, a spike, and forma, form.] Having the shape of a spike. Gray.

SPI'C-I-LY, ad. In a spicy manner. Clarke.

SPI'C-I-NÉSS, n. The quality of being spicy.

SPI'C-ING, n. The act of seasoning with spices.

SPI'CK'-AND-SPÁN', a. [Of disputed and uncertain etymology.] Quite new; now first used.

I keep no antiquated stuff;
But spick-and-span I have enough. Swift.

Spick-and-span new, just made or finished; entirely new; brand-new; fire-new. "A play spick-and-span new," Hovell.—"Brave purple cassocks . . . spick-and-span new," North.

Span-new is used by Chaucer, and is supposed to come from A. S. spannian, to stretch. Span-new is, therefore, originally used of cloth newly extended or dressed at the clothiers', and spick-and-span is newly extended on the spikes or tenters. Johnson.—Spick-new is merely nail-new, and span-new, chip-new. Many similar expressions are current in the north of Europe; fire-new, spark-new, splinter-new, also used in Cumberland; High-German nagel-new, equivalent to the Lower Saxon spiker-new. The leading idea is that of something quickly produced.—The Icelandic spann signifies not only chip, but spoon. R. Garnett.

SPI'CK-NÉL, n. A plant; spignel. Bailey.

SPI-CÓSE, a. Having ears like corn; pointed; SPI'COUS, spicuous. [L.] Ash.

† SPI-CÓS'-I-TY, n. [L. spica, a spike.] The quality of being spiked like ears of corn. Bailey.

SPI'C-U-LA, n.; pl. SPI'C-U-LÆ. [L. dim. of spica, a spike.] (Bot.) A small spike; a spikelet:—a pointed, fleshy, superficial appendage:—acicula. Henslow.—Ground-pine. Wm. Smith.

SPI'C-U-LAR, a. [L. spiculus.] Having sharp points. Mander.

SPI'C-U-LATE, a. (Bot.) Noting a surface covered with fine, pointed, fleshy appendages:—noting a spike that is composed of several smaller spikes crowded together. Henslow.

SPI-C-U-LÍF'E-NOÚS, a. [L. spiculum, a little sharp point, and gigno (Gr. γένω), to produce.] Producing, or containing, spicula. Clarke.

SPI'CY, a. Pertaining to, abounding in, or having the qualities of, spice; aromatic. "A fragrant mist of spicy fumes." Addison.

Sabean odors from the spicy shore
Of Araby the blest. Milton.

SPI'DER, n. [From spin, n being dropped. Skinner.—So named from spinning his web. Richardson.—Dut. spin; Ger. spinne; Sw. spinnet, spindel.—Old Eng. spither.]

1. (Zool.) An insect of the family Araneida, and class Arachnida. Baird.

Spiders are characterized by having palpi or feelers, which resemble small feet without a claw at the tip, frontal claws terminated by a movable hook which moves downwards, and has on its under side a little slit for the emission of a poisonous fluid that is secreted in a gland of the preceding joint, a thorax consisting of a single piece, to which is attached behind a movable and soft abdomen terminated by spinnerets, or apparatus for producing long filamentous cords with which most of the species form their nests and their webs for catching flies on which they feed. Owen. Cuvier.

Spider monkey, the common name of quadrumanous animals inhabiting South America, of the genus Ateles, remarkable for their long tails, strongly prehensile and callous at the extremity, their very slender limbs, and for their anterior hands having only four fingers. Baird.—Spider crab, a decapodous crustacean of the genus Maja,—particularly Maja squinado, or corwich, found abundantly in England and Ireland, and eaten by the poorer classes. Baird.

2. A sort of steptan bearing some resemblance to a spider. Wright.

3. A trevet to support vessels over a fire. Wr.

4. Any thing in the form of a spider, as a toy. Clarke.

SPI'DER-CATCH'ER, n. 1. One who makes a business of catching spiders. Addison.

2. A species of woodpecker. Johnson.

SPI'DER-LIKE, a. Resembling a spider. Hay.

SPI'DER-ÓR'CHIS, n. (Bot.) A name given to two species of orchidaceous plants, Ophrys araneifera, and Ophrys arachnites. Eng. Cyc.

SPI'DER-SHÉLL, n. A kind of murex-shell. Hill.

SPI'DER-WORT (-wurt), n. (Bot.) The common name of plants of the genus Tradescantia, one species of which, Tradescantia Virginica, is cultivated as a border-flower. Lindley.

SPI'G-NÉL, n. (Bot.) The common name of herbaceous plants of the genus Athamanta. Loudon.

SPI'G-NÉT, n. The common name of Azalia racemosa;—corrupted from spikenard. Gray.

SPI'G'QT, n. [W. yspigod; pig, yspig, a spike.—See SPIKE.] A peg to stop the vent-hole in a cask or in a faucet. Swift.

SPI-GÜE'NÉL, n. (Eng. Law.) The sealer of the king's writs. Whishaw.

SPIKE, n. [L. spica, a point, an ear of grain; It. spiga; Sp. espiga.—Dut. spijker; Dan. spiger; Sw. spik.—W. pig, yspig.]

1. An ear of corn or grain, as of wheat or rye.

The gleaners
Spoke after spike, their sparing harvest pick. Thomson.

2. A very large nail, usually of iron. Bacon.

3. A long rod sharpened at one end.

He wears on his head the coron radiata, another type of his divinity; the spikes that shoot out represent the rays of the sun. Addison.

4. (Bot.) An inflorescence resembling a raceme, except that the flowers are sessile.—a shrubby species of lavender, native of southern Europe, from which is procured an essential oil used in veterinary medicine and in the preparation of certain varnishes; Lavandula spica;—called also spike-lavender. Baird. Eng. Cyc.

SPIKE, v. a. [i. SPIKED; pp. SPIKING, SPIKED.]

1. To fasten with spikes.

Lay long planks upon them, spiking or pinning them down fast. Mortimer.

SPIKE'LET, n. (Bot.) A small or secondary spike; the inflorescence of grasses. Gray.

SPIKE'-NÁIL, n. A large, long nail. Halliwel.

SPIKE'NARD [spík'nard, S. W. P. J. F. Ja. K. Sm. R.; spík'nard, E. Wb. Elphinstone], n. [L. spica, a spike, an ear, and nardus, nard.]

1. (Bot.) An East Indian dwarf plant with a long, hairy tap-root, used in the East as a remedy for a number of diseases, and much esteemed as a perfume; Nardostachys Jatamansi:—an aromatic plant formerly held in high repute; Andropogon nardus.—See NARD. Baird.—An herbaceous plant, with large, spicy, aromatic roots, growing in rich woodlands in the U. S.; Aralia racemosa. Gray.

2. The oil or balsam of Nardostachys Jatamansi. John xii. 3.

Ploughman's spikenard, (Bot.) a European plant common on calcareous soils, possessing a volatile oil with a peculiar scent, used for the purpose of driving away fleas and gnats; Inula Conyza. Eng. Cyc.

SPI'KY, a. 1. Having a sharp point or sharp points. "The spiky harrow." Scott.

The tapering pyramid, . . . whose spiky top
Has wounded the thick cloud. Blair.

2. Set, or armed, with spikes.

Or by the spiky harrow cleared away. Scott.

The spiky wheels through heaps of earthenware. Pope.

SPILE, n. [Dut. spijl, a bar; spil, an axis, a pivot, a stalk; Ger. spille, a peg, a pin.]

1. A wooden peg to stop a hole in a cask of liquor; a spill; a spigot. Brockett.

2. A large stake driven into the ground as a foundation for some superstructure; a pile [Local, Eng. and U. S.] Halliwel.

SPILE'-HÓLE, n. The air-hole of a cask; the hole for a spile, or spigot. Foisy.

SPI'L-I-KÍNS, n. pl. Pegs of wood, bone, or ivory, for marking the score of cribbage or other games. Simmonds.

SPILL, n. [See SPILE.]

1. A small shiver,—particularly a small piece of wood used for lighting pipes, or for making matches. Halliwel. Simmonds.

2. A spigot; a spile. Mortimer.

3. A thin bar of iron; a spindle. Carver.

4. † A small slip of paper. Nares.

5. † A small quantity of money. Ayliffe.

SPILL, v. a. [A. S. spillan; Dut. & Ger. spillen; Dan. spilde; Sw. & Icel. spilla.] [7. SPILT or SPILLED; pp. SPILLING, SPILT or SPILLED.]

1. To suffer to fall, or be shed, or scattered, as a liquid or a powder; to throw away; to scatter; to effuse; to pour out; to shed.

He who would have shuddered to spill a drop of blood in a private man, shall deluge whole provinces with the prince, and laugh over the subjugated plains which he has fertilized with human gore. Knox.

They are taken by spillers made of a cord, to which divers shorter are tied at a little distance, and to each of these a hook is fastened with a bait. Carver.

SPIL'LET-FÍSH'ING, n. A system of fishing

SPIL'LIARD-FÍSH'ING, n. practised on the west coast of Ireland by means of a number of hooks set on snoods, all on one line. Simmonds.

SPILL'ING-LÍNE, n. (Naut.) A rope used for spilling a sail. Dana.

SPILT, i. & p. from spill. See SPILL.

† SPI'LTH, n. [From spill.] Any thing spilt or poured out. Shak.

SPIN, v. a. [Goth. a. S. & Old Ger. spinnan; Dut. & Ger. spinnen; Dan. spinde; Sw. & Icel. spinnu.] [i. SPUN, † SPAN; pp. SPINNING, SPUN.]

1. To combine into a thread, or to form, as a thread, by drawing out and twisting together short fibres, as of cotton, flax, or wool, or by simply twisting together long filaments, as in the case of silk of the best quality. P. Cyc.

The women spin goats' hair. Ex. xxxv. 26.

All the yarn she [Penelope] spun in Ulysses' absence did but fill Ithaca full of moths. Shak.

2. To form by the extrusion of a tenacious transparent secretion from spinnerets.

The webs formed by spinnets are composed of lines spun by spinnets, which, on being brought into contact by the action of a spinning machine, fill by continual additions of spinning material, and form regular white flakes and masses of considerable extent. Eng. Cyc.

3. To extend to a great length; to protract; to draw out; to prolong;—usually with out.

I passed lightly over many particulars on which learned and witty men might spin out large volumes. D'Estange.

By one delay after another they spin out their whole lives, fill there's no more future left before them. D'Estange.

4. To put into a turning motion like that of a spinning-wheel; to twirl; as, "To spin a top."

To spin hay, (Mil.) to twist it into ropes for convenience of transportation, when on the march. Burn.

SPIN, v. n. 1. To perform the act, or exercise the art, of spinning.

Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin; and yet I say unto you, that even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these. Matt. vi. 28.

He spins and weaves, and weaves and spins. Courcier.

2. To revolve on the axis, as a spindle.

Earth, . . . that spinning sleeps

On her soft axle.

Milton.

3. To stream out in a thread or small current.

The blood out of their helmets spans.

Drayton.

SPINACEOUS (-shus), a. (Bot.) Noting a class of plants including spinach. W. Ency.SPINACH, n. [It. spinace; Sp. espinaca; Fr. épinard; Dut. spinazie; Ger. & Dan. spinat; Sw. spenat; —from L. spina, a prickly.] The common name of plants of the genus Spinacia, one species of which, Spinacia oleracea, or common spinach or spinage, is a well-known esculent or pot-herb. Loudon.SPINAL, a. [L. spinalis; spina, the spine; It. spinale; Sp. espinal; Fr. spinal.] Belonging to the spine or back-bone.Forth from the bone the spinal marrow flies.

Pope.

SPINDLE, n. [A. S. spindel; Old Ger. spinnala; Ger., Dan., & Sw. spindel.]

1. A pendant reed or piece of wood for twisting and winding the fibres drawn from the distaff.

"At the top was a slit to attach the thread, and at the other end was a whorl or wheel to steady it. The thread, being attached to the spindle, was drawn from the distaff until a sufficient length had been gained for the attached spindle to touch the ground, a fresh turn being then given to the spindle to increase the twist. As soon as the spindle reached the ground, a length was said to be spun, and the spinner, winding it up on the spindle, and securing it firmly in the slit, proceeded to spin another length." Tomlinson.

2. A part of a spinning-wheel or similar contrivance, and revolving with a rapid motion, in which the fibres which are attached to the end of it.

A. Jamieson.

3. The fusée of a watch.

Simmonds.

4. A long, slender stalk.

Mortimer.

5. A measure of yarn.

Simmonds.

"In cotton yarn, a spindle of eighteen hanks is 15,120 yards; in linen yarn, a spindle of twenty-four hanks is 14,400 yards." Simmonds.

6. (Mech.) A small axle or axis, in contradistinction to a shaft, or large axle.

We say, the shaft of a fly-wheel, the spindle of a pinion.

Grier.

7. (Math.) A solid generated by the revolution of a portion of a curve about a chord perpendicular to an axis of the curve. Da. & P.

8. (Conch.) The shell of a mollusk of the genus Strombus, resembling a spindle. Eng. Cyc.The spindle is denominated arcular, clipte, hyperbolus, &c., according to the character of the generating curve. Davies.SPINDLE, v. n. To shoot or grow like a spindle; to grow in a long, slender stalk or tuft.When the flowers begin to spindle.

Mortimer.

SPINDLE-LEGGED (spín/di-légd), a. Having long, slender legs; spindle-shanked. Tatter.SPINDLE-LÉGS, n. A tall, slender person; a spindle-legged person; — in contempt. Smart.SPINDLE-SHANKED (spín/di-shàngkt), a. Spindle-legged. Addison.SPINDLE-SHANKS, n. Spindle-legs. Smart.SPINDLE-SHAPED (spín/di-shápt), a. 1. Shaped like a spindle; fusiform. Lee.

2. (Bot.) Terete and tapering to each end.

SPINDLE-SHELL, n. (Zool.) A mollusk of the genus Buccinum. Ash.SPINDLE-TRÉE, n. (Bot.) The popular name of ornamental shrubs of the genus Euonymus, one species of which (Euonymus Europæa) affords a tough wood used for making skewers and spindles. Loudon. Baird.SPINDLE-WORM (-wurm), n. (Ent.) A lepidopterous insect, the caterpillar of which attacks maize, and sometimes the dahlia; Gortyna zea; — so named from its destroying the spindle of the Indian corn. Harris.SPINDLING, p. a. Shooting into a small stalk; long and slender. Ash.SPINE, n. [L. & It. spina, a thorn, the spine; Sp. espina; Fr. épine.]

1. (Anat.) The bony column extending from the head to the sacrum; the back-bone; the vertebral column; — so called from the thorn-like processes of the vertebrae: — the anterior part of the tibia or leg; the shin. Dunglison.

2. (Bot.) A sharp, hard, conical process; a thorn. — See THORN.

Roses, their sharp spines being gone. Beau. & Fl."Spines, or thorns sometimes represent leaves, as in the barberry. . . . Most commonly spines are stunted and hardened branches arising from the axils of leaves, as in the hawthorn and plum." Gray.

3. (Zool.) A stout, rigid, and pointed process of the integument of an animal, formed externally by the epidermis, and internally of a portion of the cutis or corresponding structure; — often applied to stout, rigid, and pointed processes of the epidermis only. Micrographic Dict.

SPINED (spind), a. Having spines. Pennant.SPINEL (spín'el, W. P. J. Ja. C. Wr.; spín'el, S. K. Sm.; spi-nél', Brande), n. [Ger. spinell. — Fr. spinelle.] (Min.) A hard mineral occurring in octahedral crystals, of various shades of red passing into blue, green, yellow, brown, and black, and composed, when pure, of alumina and magnesia. The magnesia is often replaced by protoxide of iron, zinc, or manganese, and the alumina is sometimes partially replaced by peroxide of iron. Dana.The varieties of spinel have been denominated, according to their colors, as follows: — the black varieties, pleonaste; the red, rubicelle; the rose-red, balas ruby; the yellow, oriental ruby; the violet colored, almanzine ruby. The oriental ruby is sapphire. Dana.SPINEL-LINE, n. (Min.) A mineral found crystallized and massive, and composed chiefly of silica, sulphuric acid, alumina, and soda; — called also nozem. Dana.SPINELLE', n. [Fr.] (Min.) Spinel. Brande.SPINÉS'CENT, a. (Bot.) Terminating in a spine, or somewhat spinose. Gray.SPIN'ET, or SPIN'ET', [spín'et, W. P. F. Ja. C. Wr. Wb.; spe-nét', S. J. K. Sm. R.], n. [It. spinetta; Sp. espinetea; Fr. épinette; — from L. spina, a thorn, because its quills resemble thorns. Dietz.] (Mus.) A stringed instrument formerly much in use, resembling a harpsichord, but smaller, and having only one set of jacks and strings, and consequently only one stop; — originally called a couched harp. Moore.

W. P. F. Ja. C. Wr. Wb.; spe-nét', S. J. K. Sm. R. Swift.

+ SPIN'ET, n. [L. spinetum; spina, a thorn.] A small wood, or a place of briars and bushes; — written also spiny, and spinney. B. Jonson.+ SPIN'ET-ED, a. Slit or opened. Ascham.SPIN'IFER-OÜS, a. [L. spina, a thorn, and fero, to bear.] Bearing spines or thorns. Blount.SPIN'IG'ER-OÜS, a. [L. spina, spine, and gero, to bear.] Having or bearing a spine. Maunders.SPIN'IN-ÉSS, n. Quality of being spiny. Chapman.SPINK (spínk, 82), n. (Ornith.) A finch.The spink chants sweetest in a hedge of thorns. Harte.SPIN'NER, n. 1. One who spins. Grant.2. A spider. "Long-legged spinnings." Shak.3. (Ent.) The caterpillar of a moth of the group Bombyces. T. W. Harris.

4. pl. (Zool.) Two long, coiled glands which secrete the silk in insects, occupying the sides of the body, and terminating anteriorly in a common orifice beneath the labium: — in spiders, the nipples placed at the end of the abdomen, below the anus, and pierced at the extremity with an immense number of minute orifices for the discharge of silken threads, which are produced from matter formed in internal reservoirs. Brande. Eng. Cyc.

SPIN'NER-ÉT, n. (Zool.) A spinning organ, as of the spider; a spinner. Eng. Cyc.SPIN'NER-Y, n. A place where spinning is performed; a mill for spinning. P. Cyc.SPIN'NEY, n. [See SPINET.] Magnified spinneret. A small wood; a thicket; a spinet.One of our most favorite walks is spoiled. The spinney is cut down to the stumps, even the lilacs and the syringas to the stumps. Cowper.SPIN'NING, n. 1. The act or the art of forming a uniform continuous thread out of fine fibrils of animal or of vegetable origin, arranged as equally as possible alongside, and usually at the ends, of each other, and then twisted together. Loe.

2. The act or practice of forming lines, webs, or cocoons, by the extension of a tenacious transparent secretion from spinnerets. Eng. Cyc.

SPIN'NING-JEN'NY, n. A machine used in the manufacture of cotton, and consisting, in its simplest form, of a number of spindles turned by a common wheel, or cylinder, worked by hand. Bigelow.It was originally invented by Hargreaves, in 1767, but ultimately improved by Sir Richard Arkwright. The term jenny was derived from the wife of Hargreaves, whose name was Jane. Pulleyn.It was so named, according to some, from its doing the work of a female; but according to a grandson of Hargreaves, the inventor, from the word gun, a contraction of engine, the new machine being called a gunny, and the process gunning. Tomlinson.SPIN'NING-WHEEL, n. A machine for spinning, consisting of a single spindle driven by a large wheel with which it is connected. Gay.SPIN'NY, a. Small; thin; slender. [R.] Mortimer.SPIN'NÖSE, or SPIN'NÖSE' (129), a. [L. spinosus.] (Bot.) Full of spines or thorns; thorny; spinous. Gray.SPIN'NÖS'I-TY, n. The quality or the state of being spinous or thorny. More.SPIN'NOUS, a. [L. spinosus; spina, a thorn.] Thorny; full of thorns; spiny; spinose. Mede.SPIN'Q-ZISM [spín'q-zizm, K. C. Wr.; spín'no-zizm, Sm. Wb.; spe-nó'zizm, Brande], n. A pantheistic doctrine or system of Benedict Spinoza, a Jew, who was born at Amsterdam in 1632.

Spinoza deduces, by strictly mathematical reasoning, from a few axioms, the well-known principles, "that there can be no substance but God; whatever is, is in God; and nothing can be conceived without God." Brande.

SPIN'Q-ZIST, n. An adherent of Spinoza; a believer in Spinozism. Warburton.SPIN'STER, n. 1. One who spins; a spinner. Shak.

2. + A woman of ill life.

Many women of the highest rank and fortune, who were formerly employed in that vocation. Latham.

3. (Law) The addition given to an unmarried woman, in legal proceedings, and in conveyancing; a single woman.

Rebecca Dingley, of the city of Dublin, spinster. Swift.Formerly it was a maxim that a young woman should never be married till she had spun herself a set of body, table, and bed linen. From this custom all unmarried women were termed spinsters, an appellation they still retain in all deeds and law proceedings. Pulleyn."The term single woman is now generally used in its place." Burnell."Originally words in str were limited to females, and were opposed to the substantives in er, the names of male agents. The single word spinster still retains its feminine force." Latham.SPIN'STRY, n. The work or the business of spinning; spinning. [R.] Milton.SPIN'THERE, n. (Min.) A greenish-gray variety of sphene. Dana.SPIN'ÜLE, n. [L. spinula; dim. of spina, a spine.] A small or minute spine. Hill.SPIN-U-LÉS'CENT, a. (Bot.) Producing small spines; becoming spinous or thorny. Loudon.SPIN-U-LÖSE' (129), a. (Bot.) Covered with spinules or small spines; spinulous. Loudon.SPIN-U-LOÜS, a. Covered with small spines; spinulose. Wright.SPIN'Y, a. 1. Full of spines or thorns; thorny; briery; spinous. "Spiny rays." Pennant.

2. Perplexed; difficult; vexatious; troublesome; arduous.

The spiny deserts of scholastic philosophy. Warburton.SPIN'Y, n. A small wood. — See SPINET. Todd.+ SPIN'ON, n. [Fr. espion.] A spy. Old Play.+ SPIN'RA-BLE, a. [L. spirabilis; spiro, to breathe.] That can breathe; respirable. Trans. Cicero.SPIN'RA-CLE, or SPIN'RA-CLE [spín'ra-kl, W. J. F. Ja. C. Wb.; spín'ra-kl, S. P. E. K. Sm. R.], n.

[L. spiraculum; spiro, to breathe; It. spiracolo.]

1. (Zoöl) The external orifice of one of the tracheæ of insects and arachnids; — called also stigma. Micrographac Dict.
2. One of the blow-holes, or breathing-holes, of a whale. Simmonds.
3. A small aperture or vent. Woodward.

SPÍRAL, a. [L. spira, a coil, a spire; It. spirale; Sp. espiral; Fr. spirale.]

1. Winding like the worm of a screw; winding round a cylinder or circularly, and constantly advancing. Ray.
2. Pointed like the spire or steeple of a church. [It.] Fairholt.
3. (Bot.) Arranged in a spiral manner round some common axis. Landley.

Spiral pump. See ARCHIMEDEAN-SCREW.

SPÍRAL, n. (Geom.) A curve that may be generated by a point moving along a straight line, in the same direction, according to any law, while the straight line revolves uniformly about a fixed point, the point of intersection being in the same plane. Davies & Peck.

The moving point is the generatrix of the spiral, the fixed point is the pole of the spiral, and the distance from the pole to any position of the generatrix is the radius vector of that point. The law, according to which the generatrix moves along the revolving line, is the law of the spiral, and determines the nature of the curve. Davies & Peck.

Hyperbolic spiral, a spiral, the law of which is, that the distance from the pole to the generatrix varies inversely as the distance swept over. — Logarithmic spiral. See LOGARITHMIC. — Parabolic spiral, a spiral, the law of which is, that the distance of the pole from the generatrix varies as the square root of the angle swept over by the line. — Spiral duct of spiral vessel, (Bot.) an organ of the root formed by the confluence of several cells with their delicate membranous walls strengthened by the deposition of fibres within in the form of a continuous spiral coil. Gray. — Spiral of Archimedes, a spiral, the law of which is, that the generatrix moves uniformly along the revolving line. Da. & P. — Spiral of Pappus, a spiral formed on the surface of a sphere by a motion similar to that by which the spiral of Archimedes is described on a plane. Hutton.

SPÍRAL-LÝ, ad. In a spiral form. Ray.

† SPÍRÁ'TION, n. [L. spiratio.] A breathing. God did by a kind of spiration produce them. Barrow.

SPÍRE, n. [Gr. strepa; L. & It. spira; Sp. espira; Fr. spire.]

1. A line winding like the worm of a screw; a spiral line; a spiral; a wreath.

Unfinished neck of a pendant gold ornament. Milton.

2. (Arch.) Among the ancients, the base of a column: — the astragal, or torus, of the base: — in modern architecture, a pyramidal structure of brickwork, masonry, or wood, circular, low or solid; a steeple. Britton. Brewer.

Spires whose silent fingers point to heaven. Wordsworth.
"Spires sometimes rise immediately from the ground, and are carried up to a great height; in other instances, they are placed upon round, square, or polygonal buildings, called towers." Britton.

3. A stalk or shoot, as of grass. "An oak cometh of a little spire." Chaucer.

4. The top or uppermost point; summit. "The spire and top of praises." Shak.

5. (Math.) That portion of a spiral which is generated by one revolution of the straight line revolving about the pole. — See SPÍRAL. Da. & P.
6. (Conch.) The part of univalve shells which consists of all the whorls except the lower one, called the body. Woodward.

Syn. — See STEEPLE.

† SPÍRE, v. n. 1. To shoot up in spires or pyramidentally. "The spiring grass." Drayton.

2. To sprout, as grain in malting. Wright.

3. † [L. spiro.] To respire. Shenstone.

† SPÍRE, v. a. To shoot forth. Spenser.

SPÍRED (spírd), a. Having a spire. Mason.

SPÍRE-STÉE-PLÉ, n. The summit of a turret of a church. [R.] Swift.

SPÍRÍ-FER, n. [L. spira, a spire, and fero, to bear.] (Pal.) An extinct genus of Brachiopoda, characterized by having two internal calcareous spiral appendages to the shell. Brande.

SPÍR'IT (spírit, W. P. J. F. Ja. K. Sm. R. Wb.; spírit, S.), n. [L. spiritus; spiro, to breathe, to blow; It. spirito; Sp. espiritu; Fr. esprit.]

1. † Breath. "A raw spirit, or wind." Bacon.

2. Immaterial substance; immateriality.

3. An intelligent being or substance imperceptible by our present senses; soul. Milton.

The term spirit properly denotes a being without a [material] body. A being that never had a [material] body is a ghost. They were terrified and affrighted, and supposed that they had seen a spirit. Luke xxiv. 17.

4. That which is apparent to sight, but usually not otherwise perceptible; an apparition; a ghost; a spectre.

They were terrified and affrighted, and supposed that they had seen a spirit. Luke xxiv. 17.
 I heard a voice saying, shall mortal man be more just than God? Job iv. 15, 16, 17.

5. Constitution or disposition of mind with regard to the sensibilities; temper.

That people late of Christendom which forbids revenge, as the restless torments. Milton.

6. Intellectual constitution; power or strength of understanding, turn or power of mind.

More ample spirit than hitherto was wont.

Here needs me. Spenser.

With a spirit of wit.

Wit is a spirit of wit. Pope.

7. Intellectual perception; imagination.

In spirit, perhaps, he also saw

Rich Mexico, the seat of Montezuma. Milton.

Absent in body, but present in spirit. 1 Cor. v. 3.

8. Elevation or vehemence of mind; courage; ardor; fire; resolution.

The spirit of a youth

Is kindled, and begins to burn. Shak.

9. An emotion or activity of the mind directed to the attainment of an object; eager desire.

God has changed men's tempers . . . made a spirit of building succeed a spirit of pulling down. South.

10. A man of activity or energy; a person of life, fire, or enterprise.

The watery kingdom is no bar

To stop the foreign spirit; but they come. Shak.

11. A person, as characterized by particular qualities of mind or soul.

The choice and master spirits of this age. Shak.

12. pl. Those properties of the mind which produce excitement; cheerfulness; gayety.

So much I feel my genial spirits droop. Milton.

13. Characteristic quality or expression.

A descending light which doth set off men's faces in their truest spirit. Wotton.

14. Vital or active principle; essence.

There is in wine a mighty spirit, that will not be congealed. South.

15. Nature; character; complexion.

A change came o'er the spirit of my dream. Byron.

16. A mark to denote an aspiration; a breathing.

The . . . troublesome luggage of spirits and accents. Dalgarno.

17. A term applied to all inflammable liquors obtained by distillation, as brandy, rum, gin, whiskey, &c.

"Spirits were formerly distinguished into inflammable, acid, and alkaline; and consequently a number of substances were crowded together, which often resembled each other in no other property than in being volatile. The term is now confined to alcoholic liquors." Dunglison.

18. pl. (Dyeing.) Solutions of tin in acids, used for dyeing different colors. Thomson.

19. (Theol.) The third person in the Trinity; the Holy Spirit; the Holy Ghost. Hook.

Animal spirits, the fluid which is supposed to circulate through the nerves, and which has been regarded as the agent of sensation and motion; the nervous fluid or principle. Dunglison. — Holy Spirit, (Theol.) the third person in the Trinity; the Holy Ghost. — Pyroxylic spirit, wood spirit; methylic alcohol. Miller. — Rectified spirit, proof spirit freed by distillation from foreign matters. Wood & Baché. — Spirit of ammonia, a solution of caustic ammonia in rectified spirit. — Spirit of hartshorn, an impure carbonate of ammonia, obtained from the shavings of the horns of the hart or stag, by destructive distillation; — a term applied also to ammoniacal solutions

When perfectly pure, it is limpid and colorless, of a strong, penetrating odor, of a hot, pungent, bitterish taste, highly volatile and inflammable, lighter than water, and consisting of hydrogen and carbon; — called also camphene. Wood & Baché. — Spirit of wine, or spirit of wine, alcohol; — so called from its having been originally distilled from wine. Sullivan.

"Among modern philosophers in Germany, a distinction is taken between Psyche, (Soule, and Geist), (Geist), or soul and spirit. According to G. H. Schubert, professor at Munich, and a follower of Schelling, the soul is the inferior part of our intellectual nature, that which shows itself in the phenomena of dreaming, and which is connected with the state of the brain. The spirit is that part of our nature which tends to the purely rational, the lofty, and divine." Fleming.

"The general sound of the first i, in this word and all its compounds, was, till lately, the sound of e in merit; but a very laudable attention to propriety has nearly restored the i to its true sound; and now spirit sounded as if written spirit begins to grow vulgar." Walker.

Syn. — See SOUL.

SPÍR'IT-U-ĀL-ĪSM, n. 1. That system (as opposed to materialism) according to which all that is real is spirit, soul, or self;—that which is called the external world being either a succession of notions impressed on the mind by the Deity, or else the mere educt of the mind itself. The former is the spiritualism of Berkeley; the latter, that of Fichte. Brande.

2. The doctrine that departed spirits hold communication with men. O. A. Brownson.

SPÍR'IT-U-ĀL-ĪST, n. 1. One who professes regard to spiritual things only, or one whose employment is spiritual. Echard.

2. One who believes in the doctrine of spiritualism as opposed to materialism; one who admits the reality of an intelligent being distinct from the perceptible universe.

"Spiritualists, with respect to the human mind or soul, seem to hold different opinions, so as to bring them under the different denominations of Platonists and Anti-Platonists. The Platonists believe the soul to be quite distinct from the body, in such a manner that death is the literal separation of one from the other, the one continuing to exist as mere matter, the other as an intelligent being, whose substance is intelligence or intellectuality merely; the Anti-Platonists deem mind or soul to be nothing more than a name for the capabilities of sensation, perception, and thought, with which man is endowed simply in consequence of his Maker's will; that these capabilities cease at death as motion ceases in a rolling ball, when it comes to a state of rest; and consequently that a future state of existence is not the existence of the soul separately from the body, (which is the doctrine of the pure Platonists,) nor of the reunion of the soul with the body, after the former has for a while existed separately, (which is the opinion, perhaps, of the majority of Christians,) but is the raising of the body, through the power of the Creator, under new circumstances of existence, a spiritual body from that which was a material body;—and this is the opinion of the Anti-Platonists among Christians." Smart.

3. A believer in the doctrine that the spirits of the dead hold communication with men. Beecher.

SPÍR'IT-U-ĀL-ĪST'IC, a. Pertaining to spiritualism, or to the spiritualists. Ec. Rev.

STÄRCH, v. a. [i. STARCHED; pp. STARCHING, STARCHED.] To stiffen with starch; to apply starch to; as, “To starch linen.”

STÄR'-CHÄM-BER, n. An English court of very ancient origin, but new-modelled by statutes of Henry VII. and of Henry VIII., having jurisdiction over riots, perjuries, misbehavior of sheriffs, and other notorious misdemeanors, which were tried without the intervention of a jury;—abolished, after having greatly abused its powers, in the reign of Charles I., and called also Court of Star-chamber. Burrill.

“This court is said to have been so called either from the A. S. steoran, to steer or govern, or from its punishing the crimen stellionatus, or cozenage; or because the room wherein it sat, the old council-chamber of the palace of Westminster, was full of windows; or because happily the roof or ceiling was at the first garnished with gilded stars,—the latter being the opinion of Lord Coke. All these are very reasonably pronounced by Sir W. Blackstone to be merely conjectures, no stars being visible in the roof of the apartment in his day, nor are any said to have remained there so late as the reign of Queen Elizabeth. The learned commentator's own opinion is, that the Star-chamber was so called from being held in that room at the exchequer where the chests containing those Jewish contracts and obligations called stars (from the Heb. shetar, pronounced shetar) were kept. That the principal repository of these stars was in the king's exchequer at Westminster, is clearly shown by an ordinance of Richard I., preserved by Hoveden; and the first time the Star-chamber is mentioned in any record, it is expressly said to have been situated near the receipt of the exchequer at Westminster.” Burrill.

§ "The word starvation was first introduced into the English language by Mr. Dundas [the first Lord Melville] in a speech, in 1775, on an American debate, and hence applied to him as a nickname — Starvation Dundas." Horace Walpole.

Dr. Trench appears to be mistaken with respect to the origin of this word. He says, "Starvation is a word of quite recent introduction, — its first formers, indeed, not observing that they were putting a Latin termination to a Saxon word. The word is an Americanism." — "Strange as it may appear, it is nevertheless quite true, that this word [starvation], now unhappily so common on every tongue, is not to be found in our own English dictionaries, neither in Todd's Johnson, nor in Richardson's, nor in Smart's Walker Remodelled, published in 1836. In his Supplement, issued a few years ago, Mr. Smart adopted it as 'a trivial word, but in very common, and, at present, good use.'" Notes & Queries.

§ "It is, I think, a solitary instance of this Latin termination to a native English root." Richardson's Supplement.

STEAM (stēm), v. n. [i. STEAMED; pp. STEAMING, STEAMED.]

1. To send forth or emit vapor or steam.
Let the crude humor's dance
In heated blood, steaming with life intense. Philips.
Ye mists that rise from steaming lakes. Milton.

2. To pass off in vapor; to evaporate.
When the last deadly smoke aloft did steam. Spenser.
The dissolved amber ... steamed away into the air. Boyle.

3. To sail or move by steam. [R.] Ireland.

STEAM, v. a. 1. To exhale; to evaporate.
In slodful sleep his molten heart to steam. Spenser.

2. To expose to steam; to apply steam to; to soften or to concoct with steam. Wright.

STEAM-BOAT, n. A large boat propelled by steam; a steam-vessel. Fulton.

STEAM-BÖIL-ER, n. A large boiler, or vessel, for generating steam. Brande.

STEAM-CAR, n. A car propelled by steam.

STEAM-CAR-RIAGE, n. A carriage propelled by power of steam. P. Cyc.

STEAM-CHÉST, n. A box attached to the cylinder of a steam-engine in which the sliding valves work. Tomlinson.

STEAM-CYL-IN-DER, n. The cylinder of a steam-engine in which the movable disk or piston moves. Simmonds.

STEAM-DÖME, n. A dome-shaped structure on a steam-boiler for receiving the steam generated, and allowing it to be drawn into the steam-pipe, free from the fine spray or mist which is apt to accompany it when drawn off near the surface of the boiling water. Tomlinson.

STEAM-DREDG-ER, n. A machine, worked by steam, for clearing rivers, harbors, &c. Simmonds.

STEAM-EN-GINE, n. An engine acted upon by the expansive force of steam, and employed to impel boats, cars, and other machinery. Prout.

STEAM'ER, n. 1. A vessel propelled by steam; a steam-boat; a steam-ship. Qu. Rev.

2. Any vessel in which steam is applied for softening or cooking any thing. Simmonds.

STEAM-ER-DÜCK, n. (Ornith.) A large duck; — so called from its swift paddling motion; race-horse; Micropterus brachypterus. King.

STEAM-GAUGE, n. A contrivance to show the exact amount of pressure of steam. Simmonds.

The mercurial steam-gauge consists of a glass tube bent into the siphon form, the bent part and a portion of each leg being filled with mercury. One leg communicates with the steam within the boiler, and the other is open to the atmosphere. The difference between the levels of the columns of mercury in the two legs is always a measure of the difference between the pressure of the steam and that of the atmosphere. The position of the surface of the mercury in the tube is often indicated by a float. Brande.

STEAM-GÜN, n. A gun by which balls and other projectiles may be projected by steam. Brande.

STEAM-PACK-ET, n. A steam-vessel for carrying passengers, letters, &c., and running periodically between certain ports. Qu. Rev.

STEAM'-PIPE, n. A pipe which collects and conveys the steam in locomotive engines, to the steam-chest. Simmonds.

STEAM'-POW-ER, n. The power of steam employed in moving machinery. Tomlinson.

STEAM'-PRESS, n. A printing-press worked by steam. Simmonds.

STEAM'-PRO-PÉL-LER, n. A propeller for driving a steam-vessel. Simmonds.

STEAM'-PÜMP, n. A pump worked by steam.

STEAM'-SHIP, n. A ship propelled by steam.

STEAM'-TÜG, n. A small steam-boat employed to tow vessels, barges, &c. Simmonds.

STEAM'-VÉS-SÉL, n. A vessel propelled by steam; steam-ship. Qu. Rev.

STEAM'-WHIS-TLE (-hwis-sl), n. A pipe attached to the boiler of a steam-engine, from which steam escapes with a loud, shrill, or hissing noise; — used to give warning of the approach of the engine, &c. Tanner.

STEAM'Y, a. Consisting of, or abounding in, steam; moist or damp with steam. Coeper.

STÉAN, v. a. [A. S. stēan, to stone.] To line, as a well, with stone or brick. [Local.] Hallivell.

† STÉAN, n. [A. S. stēna.] A vessel of stone.
Upon a huge, great, earthen pot steam he stood. Spenser.

STÉA-RATH, n. (Chem.) A salt consisting of stearic acid and a base. Miller.

STÉ-ÁR'IC, a. (Chem.) Noting a fatty acid existing in combination with glycerine in certain animal and vegetable fats. Gregory.

STÉA-RÍNE, n. [Gr. stēap, stiff fat, tallow.]

1. (Chem.) A white, crystalline fat, soluble in boiling alcohol and in hot ether, and the most abundant of the solid constituents of fats and oils. It is a compound of stearic acid and glycerine. Miller.

2. A popular name for stearic acid, as used in making candles. Horsford.

STÉA-RÖNE, n. (Chem.) A crystalline body, soluble in ether, obtained by distilling stearic acid with lime. Thomson.

STÉA-RÖP'TEN, n. (Chem.) A solid crystalline substance obtained from many essential oils on slowly cooling them, being one of their two components, and oleopten, a liquid chemical compound, being the other. Miller.

STÉA-TITE, n. [Gr. stēap, stēaros, tallow.] (Min.)

1. A variety of talc; soapstone.

2. A mineral of various colors, of greasy lustre, soft, almost like butter, but brittle on drying, and consisting of silica, magnesia, alumina, and water; saponite. Dana.

STÉA-TIT'IC, a. Relating to, or containing, stearite. P. Cyc.

STÉ-ÁT'O-CÉLE, n. [Gr. stēap, stēaros, stiff fat, and kēlē, a tumor; Fr. stéatocèle.] (Med.) A tumor formed by a collection of steatomatous matter in the scrotum. Dunglison.

STÉA-TÖ'MA, n. [L., from Gr. stēatōpa; stēap, suet.] (Med.) An encysted tumor, whose contents are similar to fat. Dunglison.

STÉA-TÖM'A-TOÜS, a. Relating to a steatoma, or to a fat substance. "Steatomatous matter." Dunglison.

STÉA-TO-RÍ'NÆ, n. pl. (Ornith.) A sub-family of fissirostral birds of the order Passeres and family Caprimulgidae; oil-birds. Gray.

STÉD, n. See STEAD.

STÉD'FAST, a. See STRADFAST.

STÉE, } n. [A. S. stēger, a stair. — See STAIR.]

STÉY, } A ladder. [North of England.] Brockett.

STÉED, n. [A. S. stēda.] A horse of high mettle for state or for war.
Farwell the neighing steel and the shrill trumpet. Shak.

STÉEK, v. a. [Scottish.] To shut; to close. "To steel the door." Jamieson.

STÉEK'KAN, n. A Dutch liquid measure, the twelfth part of a barrel, and averaging about four gallons. Simmonds.

STÉEL, n. [A. S. stēle; Dut. & Dan. stael; Ger. stahl; Sw. stål; Icel. stál.]

1. Iron combined with a portion of carbon, and sometimes a small quantity of silicon, &c.; a carburet of iron, — extensively used in making edge-tools, and for other purposes.
The general method of forming steel is by the process of cementation, in which malleable iron and charcoal powder in alternate layers are exposed to a high heat in a furnace for eight or ten days. The product of this operation is named blistered steel, from the blisters which appear on its surface. To render it more perfect it is subjected to the action of the hammer, in nearly the same manner that is practised with forged iron. Bigelow.

2. Iron is employed in the arts in three different states, — as crude or cast iron, as steel, and as wrought-iron, the differences depending upon the relative amounts of carbon with which the metal is combined. Cast iron contains a larger proportion of carbon than steel, and steel more than wrought or malleable iron, which ought to be quite free from carbon. In practice, however, this is never found to be the case, although the best malleable iron retains only a very minute portion of carbon. Tomlinson.

3. Armor; a weapon or weapons.

4. A proverbial term for hardness; as, "Heads of steel." Johnson.

5. (Med.) A term applied to chalybeate medicines.
After relaxing steel strengthens the solids. Arbuthnot.

Cast steel, a variety of steel of superior quality, used for cutlery of the best description, and formed by using blistered steel, whereby the carbon is more equally distributed throughout the mass. Miller. — Natural steel, a steel of inferior quality produced from the best cast-iron by heating it by means of charcoal, and burning off a portion of the carbon, and rendering it homogeneous by forging. — used for making agricultural implements, springs for machinery, &c. Miller. — Tilted steel, a variety of steel obtained from blistered steel by subjecting it to various operations, in the last of which it is forged by means of the tilt-hammer, into smaller bars. These tilted bars, when broken up and welded together, form shear-steel. Miller.

STÉEL, a. Made of steel. Chapman.

STÉEL, v. a. [i. STÉELLED; pp. STÉELING, STÉELLED.]

1. To cover, point, or edge with steel. "Steel my lance's point." Shak.

2. To make hard or firm.
Lies well steel'd with weighty arguments. Shak.
Why will you fight against so sweet a passion,
And steel your heart to such a world of charms? Addison.

STÉEL'-CAP, n. Armor for the head; a cap or head-piece of steel. Booth.

STÉEL'-CLAD, a. Clad or mailed with steel. "Steel-clad seeds." Wharton.

STÉEL'ER, n. (Ship-building.) The foremost or aftmost plank in a strake, which is dropped short of the stem or the sternpost. Mar. Dict.

STÉEL'-NESS, n. Quality of being steely. Smart.

STÉEL'-PEN, n. A pen made of steel. Gillot.

STÉEL'-PLAT-ED, a. Plated with steel.

STÉEL'-TRAP, n. A trap having jaws and a steel spring. Somerville.

STÉEL'-WINE, n. Wine, commonly sherry, in which steel filings have been placed for some time, used medicinally. Simmonds.

† STÉEL'Y, a. 1. Made of steel. "The steely point of Clifford's lance." Shak.

2. Hard; firm; unmoved; unfeeling. "Steely heart." Bp. Hall. "Steely resistance." Sidney.

STÉEL'YARD (stēl'yārd, colloquially stēl'yārd) [stēl'yārd, S. W. P. B. Ja. K. C.; stēl'yārd, J. F.; stēl'yārd, colloquially stēl'yārd, Sm.], n. A kind of balance, commonly consisting of a beam of iron furnished with projecting knife-edges upon which it rests, and having unequal arms, the substance to be weighed being suspended from the shorter, and the longer being provided with a constant weight, which is made to body of a tree or other plant; that part of a plant which grows upward into the air, and sustains the branches, leaves, flowers, and fruit; trunk.

Then, when the fiery suns too fiercely play,
And shuttled herbs on withering stems decay. Dryden.
Beats down the slender stem, and bearded grain. Dryden.

2. The peduncle, or the pedicel or partial peduncle; the stalk which supports the flower, leaf, or fruit of a plant.

Two lovely berries moulded on one stem. Shak.

3. The stock of a family; the progenitors; family; race; generation. "All that are of noble stem." Milton.

Learn well their lineage and their ancient stem. Tickell.

4. A branch of a family; progeny; offspring.

Of that victorious stock. Shak.

5. (Naut.) The circular piece of timber into which the two sides of the ship are united at the fore end:—the fore part of the ship, as opposed to the stern. Davis.

6. (Mus.) The linear part of a note extending upward or downward from the circular point or head; the tail of a note. Dwight.

From stem to stern, from the fore part to the stern of a ship, or throughout its whole extent. Dryden.

STĒM, v. a. [From the stem of a ship, which keeps its way, through, against, or in opposition to, the waves, the tide, the current, or the stream. Richardson.] [i. STEMMED; pp. STEMMING, STEMMED.] To oppose, as a current; to keep way steadily against; to bear up against; to stay; to stop.

At the first stem that great injured name. Pope.

STĒM, v. n. To make way by opposing some obstruction, as the wind or a current.

Through the wide Ethiopian to the Cape
Fly, stemming nightly toward the pole. Milton.

STĒM'-CLASP-ING, u. Enclosing the stem; amplexical. Louden.

STĒM'-LEAF, n. A leaf inserted into, or proceeding from, the stem. Crabb.

STĒM'LESS, a. 1. Having no stem. Crabb.

2. (Bot.) Acaulescent. Gray.

STĒM'LET, n. A young or little stem. Gray.

STĒM'-MA-TA, n. pl. [Gr. στέμμα, a garland.] (Ent.) In insects, three smooth hemispheric dots, generally on top of the head, and chiefly in the hymenoptera:—sometimes called ocelli:—the stumps and rudiments of eyes found in worms, and generally throughout the lower animals those simply added to the single compound eyes. Baird.

STĒM'PLE, n. (Mining.) A cross-bar of wood in a shaft. Smart.

STĒM'SON, n. (Naut.) A piece of compass-timber, fixed on the after part of the apron inside, having the lower end scarfed into the keelson, and receiving the scarf of the stem, through which it is bolted. Dana.

STĒNCH, n. [See STINK.] A stink; a fetid or bad smell. "Noisome stench." Shak.

STĒNCH, v. a. To make to stink. [R.] Mortimer.

†STĒNCH, v. a. To stanch. Harvey.

STĒNCH'-TRÁP, n. A contrivance to prevent the escape of offensive effluvia from sinks and drains; cesspool. Weale.

3. In the figure the arrows show the course of a liquid admitted into a stench-trap through small holes in the plate A B, in its passage from a kitchen sink to a drain below. An inverted cup being attached to this plate, and having its edges immersed in the liquid, which is maintained at the level of the dotted line, or of the orifice of the pipe, interposes an effectual obstacle to the escape of any gas.

STĒNCH'Y, a. Having a bad smell. Dyer.

STĒN'CIL, n. A piece of metal, oil-cloth, leather, or other material, in which patterns, as letters, or figures, have been cut out, to be placed on some surface, and brushed over with some coloring matter, by which the patterns are imprinted on the material beneath. Simmonds.

STĒN'CIL, v. a. [i. STENCILLED; pp. STENCIL-LING, STENCILLED.] To paint or color in figures with a stencil; to form with a stencil; to make, as letters, by a stencil. Francis.

STĒN'CIL-LĒR, n. One who works or forms figures with a stencil. Simmonds.

STĒN'CIL-LING, n. The process of forming letters or figures by means of a stencil. Simmonds.

STĒN'CIL-PLÁTE, n. A stencil. Hall.

STĒN'-Q-SÁURUS, n. [Gr. στενός, narrow, straight, and σαύρα, a lizard.] (Pal.) A genus of fossil saurians. Buckland.

STĒN'-Q-GRÁPH, v. n. To write or represent by stenography. [R.] London News.

STĒ-NÜG'RA-PHĒR, n. One who practises stenography; a stenographer. Harding.

STĒN-Q-GRÁPH'IC, a. [Fr. sténographique.] STĒN-Q-GRÁPH'IC-AL, [Relating to stenography; writing or written in short-hand. Hudding.

STĒ-NÜG'RA-PHĪST, n. One who is versed in stenography; a stenographer. Quackenbos.

STĒ-NÜG'RA-PHĪY, n. [Gr. στενός, narrow, close, and γραφία, to write; It. stenoграфия; Fr. sténographie.] The art of writing in short-hand, in which characters, or at least abbreviations, are used for whole words; tachygraphy. Wright.

†STĒNT, v. a. To stint.—See STINT. Spenser.

STĒNT, n. A stint.—See STINT. Palsgrave.

STĒNT'INGS, n. pl. Openings in a wall in a coal-mine. [Local, Eng.] Hallivell.

STĒN'TOR, n. [Gr. Στένωρ.] A Greek (a herald mentioned by Homer), whose voice is said to have equalled the united voices of fifty men:—a person of a loud voice. Coleridge.

STĒN-TÖR-ĀN, a. [Gr. στενωτικός.]

1. Relating or belonging to a stentor.

2. Very loud. "Stentorian clamors." Herbert.

†STĒN-TQ-RÖN'IC, a. Stentorian. Warburton.

STĒN-TQ-RO-PHÖN'IC, a. [Gr. Στένωρ, a herald mentioned by Homer, and φωνή, voice.] Loudly sounding; stentorian. [R.]

Of this stentorian horn of Alexander there is a figure preserved in the Vatican. Derham.

STĒP, n. [A. S. stap, stap; Dut. stap; Old Ger. stapfe; Ger. Stufe.—Gael. stap, stapa.]

1. One movement of the foot, as in walking; progression by one removal, or a single change of the place of the foot; a pace.

I'll be as patient as a gentle stream,
And make a promise of each weary step,
Till the last step has brought me to my love. Shak.

2. One remove in ascending or descending; hold for the foot; a stair.

The breadth of every single step or stair. Wotton.

3. Space passed over or measured by one removal of the foot; a pace.

The gradus, a Roman measure, may be translated a step, or the half of a paces or paces. Arminhot.

4. A small space; a small length.

There is but a step between me and death. 1 Sam. xx. 3.

5. Gradation; grade; degree.

The same sin ... hath sundry steps and degrees. Perkins.

6. Movement forward or backward, particularly the act of advancing; progression.

To derive two or three general principles of motion from particular instances, is to show the properties and the nature of motion, and to show how those manifest principles, would be a very great step in philosophy. Newton.

I take no step backward. D. Webster.

7. Manner of walking; gait.

With a submissive step I hastened down. Prior.

8. Act in any business; action; procedure.

The reputation of a man depends upon the first steps he makes in the world. Pope.

9. The round of a ladder; rundle. Simmonds.

10. (Naut.) A block of wood, secured to the keel, for the purpose of receiving the heel of the mast. Dana.

11. (Mech.) A part that receives the lower gudgeon of an upright shaft;—any piece of timber having the foot of another fixed upright in it. Wright.

STĒP, v. n. [A. S. steppan; Dut. stappen; Ger. stapfen, stappen.—Gr. στέπω.] [i. STEPPED and STEPT; pp. STEPPING, STEPPED and STEPT.]

1. To make one pace or movement of the foot, as in walking; to move forward or backward, by a single change of the place of the foot; to move forward by the feet; to walk.

Back stepped these two fair angels half amazed. Milton.

2. To come as it were by chance or suddenly.

The old poets stepped in to the assistance of the medallist. Addison.

3. To move mentally; to go in imagination.

They are stepping almost three thousand years back into the history of antiquity. Pope.

To step aside, to walk apart, or a little distance, from others. Shak.—To step forth, to come forth. Chaucer.—To step in or into, to go or to walk into a place or a state:—to become possessed of without difficulty.

"He's stepped into a great estate." Shak.—To step short, (Md.) to diminish or slacken your pace according to the regulations. Stocqueler.—To step out, (Md.) to lengthen the step to thirty-three inches by leaning forward a little, but without altering the cadence. Stocqueler.

STĒP, v. a. 1. To set or place, as the foot. Smart.

2. To put, as a mast, in its step. Dana.

STĒP.— [A. S. steop, from steopan, stapan, to be-reave; Dut. & Ger. stief; Dan. stif, stiv, sted; Old Sw. stüpp, stüpph; Sw. stuf; Icel. stüpp.—This word is generally found in composition, even in the most ancient writings. About the derivation etymologists differ much. Frisch refers it to the Bohemian stipem, ingraving, stipiti, to plant; and, according to Jun. scut signifies a person giving assistance. Junius, with whom Ilse agrees, refers this word in the most reasonable manner to the A. S. steopan, and the Old Ger. stufan, to bereave. Dobson.] A prefix denoting relationship arising out of orphanage. Thus a step-mother is a father's wife, when the real mother is dead.

A step-father, step-mother, step-sister, &c. are sometimes confounded with the half-sister, half-brother, half-sister-in-law, half-brother-in-law, &c.; but the difference will be understood by one example:—a sister-in-law is a brother's wife, or a husband's or a wife's sister; a step-sister is the daughter of a step-father or a step-mother by a former marriage to another person; while the daughter of a step-mother by present marriage is a half-sister; and the daughter of a step-father by present marriage is a uterine sister, as well as half-sister. Smart.

STĒP'-BRÖTH-ER, n. The son of a step-father or a step-mother by a former marriage.

STĒP'-CHĪLD, n. [A. S. steop-child.]

1. † An orphan. Lye.

2. The child of a step-father or a step-mother.

STĒP'-DÁME, n. A step-mother. Ramsay.

STĒP'-DÁUGH-TER, n. [A. S. steop-dóhter.]

The daughter of one's wife or one's husband by a former marriage. Parker.

STĒP'-FÁ-FHĒR, n. [A. S. steop-fader.] A mother's husband, when one's real father is dead. Burrows.

STĒPH'AN-ITE, n. (Min.) A valuable ore of silver; black silver.—See SILVER. Dana.

STĒP'-MÖTH-ER, n. [A. S. steop-moder.] A father's wife, when one's real mother is dead.

His step-mother Esculla was made a martyr. Holmes.

STĒPPE, n. [Rus.] A plain of vast extent, uncultivated, and often barren, peculiar to Asia, and synonymous with the prairie of North America and the llano of South America.

The steppes of Russia are not unlike the heaths of Germany, being in part susceptible of cultivation, and affording pasturage for numerous herds of nomadic tribes. Brande.

STĒP'PING, n. The act of going forward by steps.

The flood crept by little steppings. By. Taylor.

STĒP'PING-STÖNE, n. 1. A stone laid to assist the foot in a difficult or dirty way. Swift.

2. Any aid or means to advancement. Smart.

STĒP'-SIS-TER, n. The daughter of a step-father or a step-mother by a former marriage.

STĒP'-SÖN, n. [A. S. steop-sonu.] The son of one's wife or one's husband by a former marriage to another person.—See STEP.—Bowdler.

STĒP'-STÖNE, n. A stone before a door as a step in entering a house; a stepping-stone. Clarke.

STĒR.— [A. S. steore, rule, government; steo-ran, to rule, to steer. Sommer.] A termination, as in spinster, drugster, gamester, &c., denoting probably skill or mastery. Sommer.

STĒR-CQ-RÁ'CEOUS (-shus), a. [L. stercorosus; stercus, dung; Fr. stercoraire.] Belonging to dung; partaking of the nature of dung; fecal.

"Stercoraceous matter." Dunglison.

STĒR'QO-RĀ-NIST, n. [Fr. stercoraniste.] A stercorian.

STĒR'QO-RĀ-RI-AN, n. A believer in stercorianism; a stercorianist.

STĒR'QO-RĀ-RY, n. [L. stercorarius, pertaining to dung.] A place for holding dung.

† STĒR'QO-RĀ-TE, n. Dung; excrement.

† STĒR'QO-RĀ-TION, n. [L. stercoratio.] The act of dunging or manuring.

STĒR'QO-RĀ-ISM, n. [L. stercus, dung.] (Ecol. Hist.) A nickname applied to the doctrine of those who held that the over-created host is digested like common bread.

† STĒR'QO-RY, n. [L. stercus.] Dung.

STERE, n. [Fr. stère, from Gr. στερεός, solid.] The unit of French solid measure, equivalent to a cubic metre, or 35.31714 cubic feet, employed for measuring fire-wood, stone, &c.

STĒR'QO-BĀTE, n. [Fr. stéróbate, from Gr. στερεός, solid, and βάσις, base.] (Arch.) The lower part or basement of a building;—sometimes, but less properly, a stylobate.

STĒR'QO-Ū-Ū-Ū-MY, n. [Gr. στερεός, solid, and χρῶμα, color, dye.] A kind of wall-painting, in which the colors are mixed with water, and the whole picture permanently fixed by profuse sprinklings of water, containing a certain proportion of fluorine acid.

STĒR'QO-GRĀPH'IC-Ū-Ū-Ū, } ography

STEREOPHIC PROJECTION, see PROJECTION.

STĒR'QO-GRĀPH'IC-Ū-Ū-Ū, ad. In the manner of stereography; by stereography.

STĒR'QO-Ū-Ū-Ū-Ū-Ū, n. [Gr. στερεός, firm, solid, and γράφω, to write; Fr. stéréographie.] (Descriptive Geom.) The representation or delineation of solids on a plane.

STEREOPHIC, n. The mode of representing by stereography the surfaces which bound the five regular solids is illustrated in the cut. By folding pieces of paper or card cut as here represented, so as to make them meet at their edges, these solids may be formed. A is the tetrahedron; B the hexahedron or cube; C the octahedron; D the dodecahedron; and E the icosahedron.

STĒR'QO-Ū-Ū-Ū-Ū-Ū, n. [Gr. στερεός, solid, and μέτρον, a measure.] (Hydromatics.) An instrument for determining the specific gravity of liquid bodies, porous bodies, and powders, as well as of solids.

STĒR'QO-MĒT'RIC, } a. Relating to stere-STĒR'QO-MĒT'RIC-Ū-Ū-Ū, } ometry.

STĒR'QO-Ū-Ū-Ū-Ū-Ū, n. [Gr. στερεός, firm, solid, and μέτρον, to measure; Fr. stériométrique.] The art of measuring solid bodies, and determining their solid contents.

STĒR'QO-SCŌPE, n. [Gr. στερεός, solid, and σκοπέω, to view.] (Optics.) An instrument, of various forms, for causing, by refraction or by reflection, the superposition or coalescence of the virtual images of two dissimilar perspective pictures of the same object, presented separately one to each eye, and representing the object, one, as it appears to the right eye, and the other, as it appears to the left,—so that the combined virtual image seen appears to be a solid body, and a perfect counterpart of the object.

When we look with both eyes at an object, as a small cube, placed at the distance of distinct vision, each eye sees parts of it not visible to the other, and the images of it on the retina of the two eyes are in some degree dissimilar. There is the same dissimilarity in the pictures used in the stereoscope. In the instrument, as first invented by Professor Wheatstone, two reflectors, joined perpendicularly at their edges, with their backs towards each other, are used for deviating the light proceeding from the pictures situated one on each side of them. The eyes are to be placed close to the angle of junction. Sir David Brewster has since invented numerous other forms of it, one of which, the Lenticular Stereoscope, is extensively used. It consists of two semi-lenses or eye-pieces contained in short tubes at the top of a box (represented by the upper figure) divided by a longitudinal partition in the inside into two equal parts. Opposite to the semi-lenses, at the bottom of the box, are placed the two dissimilar pictures, rays of light from which are so refracted as to enter the eyes as if they came from one and the same object, and thus form a combined virtual image between the pictures. The relative positions of the eyes, E, E, of the semi-lenses, L, L, of two dissimilar pictures of a cube, and of the virtual image formed between them, are represented in the lower figure. In one form of the instrument, only one picture is used, it being converted in appearance into a solid by combining with it, as seen directly with one eye, a virtual reflected and reversed image seen with the other.

17. (Bot.) The common name of cruciferous plants of the genus Mathiola, several species of which are cultivated for ornament. Loudon.

And lavish stock that seeds the garden round. Thomson.

"Take the word stock: in what an almost infinite number of senses it is employed! We have live stock, stock in trade, the village stocks, the stock of a gun, the stock-dove, the stocks on which ships are built, the stock which goes round the neck, the family stock, the stocks, or public funds, in which money is invested, and other stocks, very likely, besides these. What point in common can we find between them all? This, that they are all derived from, and were originally the past participle of to stick, which, as it now makes stock, made formerly stock, and they cohere in the idea of fixedness, which is common to every one. Thus the stock of a gun is that in which the barrel is fixed; the village stocks are those in which the feet are fastened; the stock in trade is the fixed capital; and so, too, the stock on the farm, although the fixed capital has there taken the shape of horses and cattle; in the stocks, or public funds, money sticks fast, inasmuch as those who place it there cannot withdraw or demand the capital, but receive only the interest; the stock of a tree is fast set in the ground; and from this use of the word, it is transferred to a family; the stock or stirps is that from which it grows, and out of which it unfolds itself. And here we may bring in the stock-dove, as being the stock or stirps of the domestic kinds." Dr. R. C. Trench.—See STOCKS.

STÖCK, v. a. [i. STOCKED; pp. STOCKING, STOCKED.]

STÖCK'-JÖB-BER, n. An intermediate agent between the buyer and the seller of public securities; a dealer in stocks.

It was about the year 1688 that the word stock-jobber was first heard in London. Macaulay.

The members of the stock-exchange are divided into two distinct classes; viz. the brokers and the jobbers. It is the business of the brokers to receive and execute the orders of merchants, bankers, capitalists, and private individuals. The jobbers hold themselves ready to act upon the orders thus received by the brokers. For instance, if a broker has to do business in 5000*l.* consols (the market price being about 90), the jobber offers to buy his 5000*l.* at 90, or to sell him that amount at 90½, without being in the slightest degree aware whether the orders of the broker are to buy or to sell, and thus taking upon himself the risk of selling that which he does not possess, or of buying what he does not intend to keep, his only object being to undo his bargain, at a difference of ½ per cent., or even less, with another broker, who may have to effect an operation the very reverse of the other, which ½, or even 1/8, constitutes his profit. London Times.

Stump To take the stump, or to stump it, to make electioneering speeches from a stump or other elevation;—a term borrowed from the backwoods in the United States, where the stump of a tree sometimes supplies the place of a rostrum or platform for the speaker, and the speakers are styled, in cant language, stump-speakers or stump-orators, and their performances stump-speeches or stump-orations.

To stir one's stumps, to set about any thing expeditiously. [Vulgar.] Hallwell.—To be put to one's stumps, to be put to a hard shift. Hallwell.

STÜMP, v. a. [Dut. stompen, to stomp, to blunt; Dan. stampe, to curtail; Sw. stympa, to mutilate.] [2. STUMPED; pp. STUMPING, STUMPED.]

1. To lop; to cut. “The stumped toe.” More.

2. To challenge;—to puzzle. [Vulgar, U. S.]

STÜMP, v. n. 1. To brag; to boast. Bailey.

2. To move like one with his limbs cut down to a stump; to walk about stiffly, heavily, or clumsily. [Low.] Todd.

To stump it, to make electioneering speeches; to take the stump. [Low, U. S.]—To stump up, to pay cash. [Local and low.] Hallwell.—To stump out, to knock down the stump at wicket. Clarke.

STÜMP'AGE, n. Timber in trees standing. [A term used in Maine, U. S.] Chandler.

STÜMP'ER, n. One who stumps;—a boaster. Ash

STÜMP'ER-NESS, n. State of being stumpy. Clarke.

STÜMP'Y, a. 1. Full of stumps, or resembling stumps;—hard; stiff; strong. Granger.

2. Short and thick; stubby. [Low.] Todd.

STÜN, v. a. [A. S. stunian, to strike against, to stun; Ger. stannen, to be astonished.—L. attono, to thunder at, to stun; ad, at, and tono, to thunder; Old Fr. estonner, to astonish; Fr. étonner, to astonish.] [2. STUNNED; pp. STUNNING, STUNNED.]

1. To make senseless or dizzy by a blow on the head; to dull or deaden the sense or sensations of, by a blow, or as by a blow.

One hung a poleaxe at his saddle-bow,
And one a heavy mace to stun the foe. Dryden.

2. To confound or dizzy with noise; to stupefy, as the sense of hearing, by noise. “Too strong a noise stuns the ears.” Cheyne.

STÜNG, i. & p. from sting. See STING.

STÜNK (stŭngk), i. & p. from stink. See STINK.

STÜNNED (stünd), p. a. Made senseless by a blow;—applied to one who, in consequence of a fall or other accident, has received such a concussion of the brain as to deprive him, for a time, of his reason or senses. Dunglison.

STÜN'NER, n. He who, or that which, stuns.

STÜN'NING, p. a. That stuns; stupefying; as, “A stunning noise”; “A stunning blow.”

STÜNT, v. a. [Ice. stunta.—“Stunt is stopped in growth, the past part. of A. S. stintan, to stop.” Tooke.] [2. STUNTED; pp. STUNTING, STUNTED.] To hinder from growth; to stop the growth of; to stint. “This usage stunted the girl.” Arbutnot

STÜNT, n. 1. A check in growth. Forby.

2. An animal or thing stunted. Richardson.

3. A young whale two years old, which, having been weaned, is lean, and yields little blubber. Simmonds.

STÜNT'ED, p. a. Hindered in growth; as, “A stunted child”; “A stunted tree.”

STÜNT'ED-NESS, n. The state of being stunted or hindered in growth. Smart.

STUPE, n. [Gr. στῦπη, στῦπη, tow; L. stuppa, stupa, tow.] (Med.) Cloth; tow or other material used in fomentations.

And get your plasters and your warm stupes ready. Beau. & Fl.
A stupa or other article wrung out of hot water, plain or medicated, applied to a part, is a stupa. Dunglison.

STUPE, v. a. To foment; to dress with stupes.
"I stuped the ulcer." Wiseman.

STUPE, n. A stupid person. [R.] Bickerstaff.

STUPE-FÁC'TION, n. [L. stupefacio, stupefactus, to stupefy; It. stupefazione; Sp. estupefacción; Fr. stupefaction.]

1. The act of stupefying or rendering stupid.
2. The state of being stupefied; sluggishness of mind; dulness; stupidity; insensibility.

All resistance of the dictates of conscience brings a hardness and stupefaction upon it. South.

STUPE-FÁC'TIVE, a. [It. stupefattivo; Sp. estupefactivo; Fr. stupefactif.] That causes stupefaction or insensibility; obstructing the senses; dulling the sense of feeling. Bacon.

STUPE-FÁC'TIVE, n. That which stupefies; an opiate. [R.] Bacon.

STUPE-FÍED, p. a. Made stupid; senseless or sluggish of understanding; insensible.

STUPE-FÍED-NÉSS, n. The state of being stupefied; insensibility. Boyle.

STUPE-FÍ-ÉR, n. He who, or that which, stupefies. Berkeley.

STUPE-FÍ-FY, v. a. [L. stupefacio; stupo (Gr. στῦπη, to strike), to be struck senseless, and facio, to make; It. stupefare; Fr. stupefier.]

1. To make stupid; to deprive of sensibility; to cause to be obtuse or sluggish; to dull.

The fumes of drink decompose and stupefy the brain of a man overcharged with it. South.

2. † To deprive of material motion.

It is not malleable; but yet it is not fluent, but stupefied. Bacon.

§ This word, in order to be in accordance with its etymology, should obviously be spelt stunefy. The words stupefy, stupefaction, and stunefaction are all of the same origin, and consistency requires that the second syllable of all of them should be spelt alike. Johnson spells them thus, stunefactio, stunefaction, stunefy; but with "-p-" to the last "n" in "stunefactio", "stunefy"; but the authorities are against it. "This should be spelled stupefy, but the authorities are against it." In this inconsistency Johnson has been followed by most of the English lexicographers. Usage has long been, and it still is, more or less divided; but the prevailing usage in England still appears to be to spell this word stupefy.

STUPE-FÍ-ING, p. a. That stupefies; stupefactive; as, "A stupefying potion or medicine."

STU-PÉN'DOUS, a. [L. stupendus; stupro, to be struck senseless; It. stupendo; Sp. estupendo.] Wonderful; amazing; astonishing; surprising.

All those stupendous acts are deservedly the subject of a history. Clarendon.

§ "By an inexcusable negligence, this word and tremendous are frequently pronounced as if written stupendous and tremendous, even by those speakers who, in other respects, are not incorrect." Walker.

STU-PÉN'DOUS-LY, ad. In a stupendous or wonderful manner. Sandys.

STU-PÉN'DOUS-NÉSS, n. The quality or the state of being stupendous; wonderfulness. Ellis.

STU'PID, a. [L. stupidus; stupro, to be struck senseless; It. stupido; Sp. estupido; Fr. stupid.]

1. Wanting sense, sensibility, or apprehension; void of understanding; slow of apprehension; dull; obtuse; sluggish; insensible.

O that men should be so stupid grown
As to forsake the living God! Milton.
No man who knows aught can be so stupid to deny that all men naturally were born free. Milton.

2. Made or performed without skill or genius; dull; foolish. "Stupid rhymes." Swift.

STU-PÍD'-TY, n. [L. stupiditas; It. stupidità; Fr. stupidité.] The quality or the state of being stupid; want of perceptive power; sluggishness of understanding; dulness. Dryden.

STUR'GEON (stur'jun), n. [Low L. sturio, sturgeo; It. storione; Sp. esturion; Fr. esturgeon. — Ger. stör. — From A. S. stirian, to stir, — because it stirs up the mud as it swims. Gesner.]

(Ich.) An acanthopterygious fish having five gills and the body more or less covered with bony plates in longitudinal rows.

§ The common sturgeon (Acipenser Sturio), most abundant in the northern parts of Europe and in the American seas, is generally about six feet in length; but specimens occasionally occur over eighteen feet long. Its body is long and slender, gradually tapering towards the tail, and covered throughout the whole length by large, bony tubercles. The flesh is white, delicate, firm, and excellent food when fresh. The roe of the female furnishes caviare, and isinglass is made from the air-bladder. Baird.

STU-RI-G'NI-AN, n. (Ich.) One of a family of cartilaginous fishes, of which the sturgeon is the type. Brande.

STURK, n. [A. S. styrce.] A young ox or heifer; stirk. [Local, Eng.] Bailey.

STUR'NJ-DÆ, n. pl. [L. sturnus, a starling.] (Ornith.) A family of conirostral birds of the order Passeres, including the sub-families Philomorphinae, Graculinae, Buphaginae, Sturninae, Quiscalinae, Icterinae, and Agelaiinae; starlings. Gray.

STUR'NJ-NÆ, n. pl. [See STURNIDÆ.] (Ornith.) A sub-family of conirostral birds of the order Passeres and family Sturnidae; starlings. Gray.

STY'G-I-AN (stíd'je-an), a. [Gr. Στύγος, the river Styx, from στυγέω, to hate; L. stygus.] Pertaining to the Styx; belonging to the lower world; infernal; hellish, diabolical. Shak.

The Stygian council thus dissolved, and forth in order came the grand infernal peers. Milton.

STYL-A-GÁL'MA-ÍC, a. [Gr. στυλος, a column, and γάλμα, an image.] (Arch.) Noting figures serving as columns. Brande.

STY'LAR, a. Relating to the style of a dial. Sm.

STY'LE, n. [Gr. στυλος, a pillar; L. stylus, stilus; It. stile; Sp. estilo; Fr. style, stile.] — It is probable the L. stilus belongs to the Gr. στίλεος, a stalk. Liddell & Scott.

1. A kind of pencil used by the Romans, having one end sharp for writing on waxen tablets, and the other blunt and moist to make erasures with.

Hence, "to turn the style" is a phrase used by ancient writers, signifying to make corrections. Brande.

2. Something with a sharp point, as a graver, an etching-needle, surgeon's probe, &c. Da. & P.

3. The distinctive manner of writing which belongs to each author, and also to each body of writers, allied as belonging to the same school, country, or age; manner of writing or of composition; diction; phraseology.

The style of Dryden is capricious and varied, that of Pope is cautious and uniform. Johnson.

Johnson's style, unfortunately, is particularly easy of imitation, even by writers utterly destitute of his vigor of thought; and such imitations are intolerable. Abb. Whately.

4. Manner of speaking appropriated to particular characters; manner of speaking; mode of expression; character of the language used.

No style is held for base where love well named is. Shak.

5. Title; appellation.

The king gave them in his commission the style and appellation which belonged to them. Clarendon.

6. Course of writing; train of remark. [R.]

To gentle Arcite let us turn our style. Dryden.

7. Manner; method; way; form; mode; fashion; as, "An exhibition conducted in fine style."

We say not only style of writing, and style of speaking, but style of painting, style of architecture, &c. The style of dress, style of any thing, in which the taste or manner is conceived to be, in however great a measure, expressive of taste or sentiment. P. Cice.

8. (Mus.) That cast or manner of composition or performance on which the effect chiefly or wholly depends. Moore.

9. (Fine Arts.) The peculiar manner in which an artist expresses his ideas, exhibited in his choice of forms and mode of treating them.

Besides the individual style, there is also a national style; for instance, the Egyptian, the Grecian, the style of Greek art at particular epochs, as that of Phidias. Fairholt.

10. (Arch.) Any general plan or particular fashion of building, not confined, like the order, in the relative proportion of the various parts, to any set of scientific rules.

The Grecian and Roman styles of architecture. Britton.

11. (Bot.) The part of a pistil which raises the stigma above the ovary. Gray.

12. (Dialing.) The line whose shadow determines the hour; the gnomon. Davies & Peck.

13. (Chron.) A manner of reckoning time;—used in reference to the Julian and Gregorian calendar.

The manner of reckoning time according to the Julian calendar is termed Old Style, and that according to the reformed calendar of Gregory, New Style. According to the calendar instituted by Julius Cæsar, in the 45th year before Christ, the mean year consists of 365½ days, being about 11 minutes more than a tropical year. The difference amounts to about a day in 130 years. In the time of Pope Gregory XIII. the error amounted to 12 days. The latter, assuming for his fixed point of departure not A. D. 1, but the year of the Council of Nice, A. D. 325, reformed the calendar by causing 10 days to be dropped in 1582, the 15th of October in that year being reckoned immediately after the 4th; and it was ordained that every centesimal year (which by the former calendar was a leap year) should be a common year, except those divisible by 4, after suppressing the two zeros: thus 1600 was a leap year; 1700 and 1800 common years; 1900 will be a common year, 2000 a leap year, &c. The change was adopted immediately in all Catholic countries. In England "the change of style" took place, by legislative enactment, after the 2d of September, 1752, eleven nominal days being then struck out, the last day of Old Style being the 2d, and the first of New Style (the next day) the 14th instead of the 3d, and the legal year, which had previously been held to begin with the 25th of March, was made to begin with the first of January. The Gregorian and the tropical year so nearly coincide in length that the difference in 3000 years amounts to less than one day. The old style, which is adhered to only by Russia and Greece, now differs 12 days from the new. Herschel.

Syn.—Style (Gr. στυλος), from its etymology, would naturally be applied only to written composition; and diction (L. dictio) to what is spoken. They are both, however, applied to the manner both of writing and speaking; yet, more commonly, to what is written. Style expresses much more than diction. The terms phrase and phraseology are applied as often to what is spoken as to what is written. Phrase respects single words or a single expression; phraseology, a succession of words, or a series of expressions. —See LANGUAGE.

STYLED, v. a. [i. STYLED; pp. STYLING, STYLED.] To denominate; to give a title to; to entitle; to designate; to call, to term; to name.

Delicacy of sentiment and suavity of expression. Knock.

SÜB-, a Latin preposition signifying under, below, much used in composition, meaning a less or subordinate degree. Sub sometimes changes b into c, f, g, m, p, r, before those letters respectively.

Sub, prefixed to the name of a chemical compound, gives some one of the following indications in respect to its composition:—1. That it contains the smallest number of equivalents of the electro-negative component known to combine with the electro-positive component; as, suboxide of bismuth, otherwise called binoxide of bismuth, which consists of two equivalents of oxygen and one of bismuth. —2 That it contains a smaller number of equivalents of the electro-negative than of the electro-positive component; as, suboxide of silver, which consists of one equivalent of oxygen and two of silver, and subchloride of carbon, which consists of two equivalents of chlorine and four of carbon. —3. That it contains, if it is an oxy salt, a smaller number of equivalents of the acid than of the base; as, subacetate of lead, otherwise called tribasic acetate of lead, which consists of one equivalent of acid to three of base;—or that the oxy salt has a suboxide for its base; as, subacetate of mercury, which is a compound of one equivalent of acetic acid and one of suboxide (otherwise called dioxide) of mercury. Sub, in some of its applications as a chemical prefix, is in a great measure superseded by the more definite prefixes, di, tri, and the terms basic, ibasic, tribasic, &c. Graham. Miller. Gregory.

SÜB-ÄC'E-TÄTE, n. (Chem.) 1. A subsalt containing two or more equivalents of base to one of acetic acid; as subacetate of lead, otherwise called tribasic acetate of lead. Gregory.

2. A subsalt whose base is a suboxide, as subacetate of mercury, which is a compound of one equivalent of acetic acid and one of suboxide (otherwise called dioxide) of mercury. Miller.

9. (Anat.) A dead body for dissection. Clarke.
- Syn. — See MATTER, OBJECT.
- SŪB-JĒCT'ĒD [sub-jĕkt'ĕd, P. W. K. Sm. IVb.], p. a. Put under the rule, sway, or dominion of another; reduced to submission; — exposed; made liable to any thing.
"A very improper accentuation (sub-jĕct'ĕd) of the passive participle of the verb to subject, has obtained, which ought to be corrected." Walker.
- SŪB-JĒCT'ION, n. [L. subjectio; It. suggestione Sp. sujecion; Fr. sujétion.]
1. The act of subduing or subjecting.
The ... subjection of the rebels. Hale.
 2. The state of being subject or under the rule, sway, or dominion of another.
To frame himself to subjection! Spenser.
- SŪB'JĒCT-ĪST, n. One versed or skilled in the subjective philosophy. Ec. Rev.
- SŪB-JĒCT'IVE, a. [L. subjectivus; Fr. subjectif.] Relating to the subject; — opposed to objective.
"Objective certainty is when the proposition is certainly true in itself; and subjective, when we are certain of the truth of it." Watts. — "Subjective and objective are terms expressing the distinction which, in analyzing every intellectual act, we necessarily make between ourselves, the conscious subject, and that of which we are conscious, the object. 'I know,' and 'something is known by me,' are convertible propositions; every act of the soul which is not thus resolvable, belongs to the emotive part of our nature, as distinguished from the intelligent and percipient." Brande. — In the philosophy of mind, subjective denotes what is to be referred to the thinking subject, the ego; objective, what belongs to the object of thought, the non ego. . . . The adjectives subjective and objective are convenient expressions. . . . In philosophical language, it were to be wished that the word subject should be reserved for the subject of inhesion — the materia in qua; and the term object exclusively applied to the subject of operation — the materia circa quam. If this be not done, the grand distinction of subjective and objective in philosophy is confounded. Sir W. Hamilton. — See OBJECTIVE.
- SŪB-JĒCT'IVE-LY, ad. In relation to the subject; as existing in a subject or in the mind; — opposed to objectively. Pearson.
All knowledge, of whatever kind, must have a twofold groundwork of faith — one subjectively, in our own faculties, and the laws which govern them; the other objectively, in the matter submitted to our observations. Hare.
- SŪB-JĒCT'IVE-NĒSS, n. The state of being subjective; subjectivity. Clarke.
- SŪB-JĒCT'IV-ĪSM, n. The doctrine of Kant, that all human knowledge is merely relative, or that we cannot prove it to be absolute. Fleming.

SÜB-LI'MÄ-BLE-NESS, n. The state or the quality of being sublimable. Boyle.

SÜB-LI-MÄTE, v. a. [L. sublimo, sublimatus, to lift up on high; sublimis, high; It. sublimare, to sublimare; Sp. sublimar; Fr. sublimier.] [2. SUBLIMATED; pp. SUBLIMATING, SUBLIMATED.] 1. (Chem.) To raise by heat into vapor, as a solid, and then condense it; to sublime. Johnson.

2. To refine; to exalt; to elevate.

I suspect that Mr. Daniel's fancy was too fine and sublimated to be wrought down to his private profit. Fuller.

SÜB-LI-MÄTE, n. (Chem.) The product of sublimation. Bacon.

When the product of sublimation is compact, it is called sublimate, when slightly cohering, it is called flowers, as flowers of sulphur. Wood & Bauche.

Corrosive sublimate, a crystalline compound of one equivalent of chlorine and one of mercury; chloride of mercury; protochloride of mercury. It is soluble in sixteen parts of cold water, and in less than three of boiling water: has an acid, burning taste, and a greenish-yellow flavor. It is a violent, acrid poison. The best antidote for it is the whites of several raw eggs, taken immediately. Turner, Henry, and other chemists contemporary with them, regarded corrosive sublimate as a compound of two equivalents of chlorine and one of mercury, and called it bichloride of mercury. Later chemical writers, as Graham, Kane, Regnault, and Miller, make it a protochloride.—See CALOMEL.

SÜB-LI-MÄTE, a. Volatilized and again condensed; sublimated. Newton.

SÜB-LI-MÄ'TION, n. [L. sublimo, to elevate; It. sublimazione; Sp. sublimacion; Fr. sublimation.]

Easy in style thy work, in sense sublime. Prior.

Know how sublime a thing it is to suffer and be strong. Longfellow.

3. Elevated by joy; exhilarated; elated.

How sublime and grand sublime, Dost thou think with wine. Milton.

Syn.—Sublime, magnificent, splendid, grand, great, superb, and lofty, are all terms more or less applied to the productions of genius either in literature or in art; and of these terms sublime is the highest and strongest; magnificent is stronger than splendid and grand; and splendid and grand are stronger than great. A sublime style or character; a magnificent edifice; a splendid building; a grand design; a great performance; a superb structure; a lofty steeple.

Grandeur and sublimity are both applied to what is great in either a natural or a moral sense; but sublimity is more commonly used in a moral sense. The grandeur or sublimity of the heavens; the sublimity of Milton's Paradise Lost; the moral sublimity of the character of Christ.—See GREAT.

SÜB-LIME', n. 1. The grand or lofty, as distinguished from the beautiful.

There is a sublime in nature, as in the ocean or the thunder; in moral action, as in deeds of daring and self-denial; and in art, as in statuary and painting, by which what is sublime in nature and in moral character is represented and idealized. Fleming.

2. The emotion produced by grandeur. Smart.

"The sublime is a Gallicism, but now naturalized." Johnson.

SÜB-LIME', v. a. [2. SUBLIMED; pp. SUBLIMING, SUBLIMED.]

1. To raise on high; to lift aloft. Denham.

2. To elevate; to exalt; to heighten.

An ordinary gift cannot sublime an ordinary person to a supernatural employment. Bp. Taylor.

3. (Chem.) To convert, as sulphur or other solid, into vapor, by heat, and recondense into the solid form; to sublimate. Miller.

SÜB-LIME', v. n. To be volatilized by the force of heat, and then be condensed, as a solid substance; to become sublimated. Newton.

This salt is fixed in a gentle fire, and sublimes in a great one. Arbutnot.

SUB/STANCE, n. [L. substantia; sub, under, and sto, stans, to stand; It. sustanza; Sp. sustancia; Fr. substance.]

1. That which is subsistent or has real being, as distinct from that which has only metaphysical existence; substantiality; reality; being; existence; — matter; body; material; texture.

Substance, in its logical and metaphysical sense, is that which is not dependent on anything else for its existence.

"The idea . . . to which we give the name of substance, being nothing but the supposed but unknown support of those qualities we find existing, which we imagine cannot subsist without something to support them, we call that support substantia; which, according to the true import of the word, is, in plain English, standing under, or upholding." Locke.

2. The essential or material part; essence; abstract; compendium; meaning.

They are the best epitomes, and let you see with one cast of the eye the substance of a hundred pages. Addison.

3. That which is solid, palpable, real, or substantial, not imaginary.

Life is a substantial, though the substance dead. Spenser.

And as the substance, not the appearance, chose. Dryden.

4. Wealth; property; means of life or support.

He hath eaten me out of house and home, and hath put all my substance into that fat belly of his. Shak.

5. (Theol.) That which forms the divine essence or being; that in which the divine attributes inhere. Hook.

The Son is said to be the same substance as the Father — that is, truly and essentially God as the Father is. Lidd.

† SUB/STANCE, v. a. To furnish with substance or property; to enrich. Chapman.

SUB-STÁN'TIAL (sub-stán-shal), a. [It. sustantiale; Fr. substantiel.]

1. Relating to, or having, substance; real; actually existing; existent. Bentley.

2. True; solid; not merely seeming or imaginary. "Substantial happiness." Cowper.

3. Material; corporeal.

Now shine these planets with substantial rays? Prior.

4. Stout; strong; firm; solid; bulky.

Cross-barred and bolted fast, fear no assault. Milton.

5. Possessed of substance, or the means of life; moderately wealthy.

The honest and most substantial freetholders. Spenser.

SUB-STÁN'TIAL-ÍTY (sub-stán-she-ál'e-ty), n. 1. State of being substantial, or having real existence. "Substantiality of the soul." Warburton.

2. Corporeity; materiality.

The soul is a stranger to such gross substantiality. Glanvill.

SUB-STÁN'TIAL-ÍZE, v. a. To make substantial; to substantiate. [R.] Dr. Reeder.

1. A stratum lying under another stratum. Clay is the common substratum or subsoil of gravel. Brande.

2. Something supposed to be laid or placed under as a support for, or to maintain or hold together certain accidents or qualities.

Such qualities as have been observed to coexist in an unknown substratum, which we call substance. Locke.

SUB-STRÚCTION, n. [L. substructio; Fr. substruction.] An under-building. Swinnburne.

SUB-STRÚCTURE (sub-strúkt'yur), n. That on which the superstructure is raised; a foundation; an under-building.

SUB/STYLE, n. (Dialling.) The orthographic projection of the style upon the plane of the dial. Davies & Peck.

SUB-SÚL'PHATE, n. (Chem.) A sulphate containing more equivalents of base than of acid; as, "Subsulphate of mercury," — which consists of three equivalents of sulphuric acid and four of oxide of mercury. Turner.

SUB-SÚL'PHIDE, n. (Chem.) A non-acid compound of one equivalent of sulphur and more than one equivalent of a metal or other body; as, "Subsulphide of iron," — which consists of one equivalent of sulphur and two of iron. Graham.

SUB-SÚL'TIVE, a. Subsultory. [R.] Bp. Berkeley.

† SUB/SUL-TQ-RÍ-LY, ad. In a subsultory manner; by fits; by starts. Bacon.

SUB/SUL-TQ-RY, or SUB-SÚL'TQ-RY [súb'sul-túr-é, S. W. E. F.; sub-súl'túr-é, P. J. K. Sm. R. W. b.], a. [L. subsiko, subsultum, to make short leaps; sub, under, and salio, to leap.]

Bounding; moving by starts. [R.] Abp. Hort.

They [the number in tragedy] ought, for the most part, to be so arranged and irregular, and often rapid and quick turns of conversation. Armist ong.

"Mr. Sheridan is the only ortheopist who has accented this word on the first syllable, as I have done, for Dr. Johnson, Dr. Ash, Dr. Kenrick, Barclay, Fenning, Bailey, and Entick, accent the second. Its companion, desultory, is accented on the first syllable by Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Johnson, Mr. Nares, Mr. Smith, and Fenning, [and by J. E. F. Ja. K. Sm. R. W. b.]; but on the second by Dr. Ash, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Scott, W. Johnston, Mr. Perry, Buchanan, Bailey, and Entick. As these two words must necessarily be accented alike, we see Dr. Johnson and Fenning [also J. K. Sm. R. W. b.] are inconsistent. But, though the majority of authorities are against me in both these words, I greatly mistake if analogy is not clearly on my side." Walker.

SUB-SÚME, v. a. [L. sub, under, and sumo, to take.] To assume by consequence of what precedes, as a position.

St Paul, who cannot name that word "sinners," but must straight subsume in a parenthesis, "of whom I am the chief." Hammond.

SUB-SÚMP'TION, n. The assumption of any thing as a consequence from what precedes.

When we are able to comprehend why or how a thing is, the belief of the existence of that thing is not a primary datum, but a consequence of a previous cognition. Dr. W. Hamilton.

SUB-TÁN'GENT, n. (Geom.) That part of an axis included between the points in which a tangent cuts it, and the foot of the ordinate through the point of contact. Davies & Peck.

In the figure A D is the subtangent, B D the tangent, and A B the ordinate.

SUB-TAR-TÁ'RE-AN, a. Being, or living, under Tartarus. "Subtartarean powers." Pope.

SUB-TÉG-U-LÁ'NE-OÛS, a. [L. subtegulaeus; sub, under, and tegula, tiles, a roof.] Under the eaves. Clarke.

SUB-TÉN'ANT, n. The tenant of one who is himself a tenant. Bowdler.

SUB-TÉND', v. a. [L. subtendo; sub, under, and tendo, to stretch.] [i. SUBTENDED; pp. SUBTENDING, SUBTENDED.] To stretch or extend under; to be opposite to, as a line to an angle.

Though the apparent magnitude of objects is supposed to depend upon the angle they subtend, it is nevertheless our familiarity with them changes our estimation of their bulk. Tucker.

SUB-TENSE', n. (Geom.) A chord. Davies.

SUB-TÉP'ID, a. Tepid in some degree. Smart.

SUB'TÉR. [L.] A Latin preposition signifying under; — equivalent to sub, as a prefix.

SUB-TĒ-RĒTE', a. Somewhat terete. Clarke.

SUB-TĒR-FLU-ENT, { a. [L. subterfluus, subter-
SUB-TĒR-FLU-ŌUS, { fluens; subter, under, and

SUB-TĒLE-LY, ad. In a subtile manner; thinly; finely: — artfully; subtly. — See SUBTLY.

SUB-TĒLE-NĒSS, n. The quality or the state of being subtile; subtilty. Wiseman.

† SUB-TĒL'I-ĀTE, v. a. To make subtile; to make thin or rare.

Matter, however subtilized, is matter still. Boyle.

† SUB-TĒL-I-ĀTION, n. The act of making thin or subtile; rarefaction. Boyle.

SUB-TĒL'I-TY, n. [L. subtilitas.] Fineness; thinness; subtilty. [R.] Smart.

SUB-TĒL-I-ZĀTION, n. [Fr. subtilisation.]

1. The act of subtilizing, or the state of being subtilized; rarefaction. Cheyne.

2. Excessive refinement. [R.] Johnson.

SUB-TĒL-I-ZĒ [sū't'l-iz, S. W. E. Ja. K. Sm.;
sū't'l-iz or sū't'l-iz, P.], v. a. [It. sottillizzare;
Sp. sutilizar; Fr. subtiliser.] 1. SUBTILIZED;
pp. SUBTILIZING, SUBTILIZED.]

1. To make thin; to make less gross.

Chyle, being mixed with the choler and pancreatic juices, is further subtilized. Ray.

2. To refine; to render excessively nice.

'Tis no wonder if the wit of men so employed should perform a subtilization of the words. Locke.

SUB-TĒL-I-ZĒ, v. n. To refine too much in argument; to use unnecessary refinement.

He must not subtilize; he must not deal in general reflections and abstract reasonings. Blair.

SUB-TĒL-TY, n. [L. subtilitas; subtilis, fine; It.
sottilezza; Sp. sutilidad; Fr. subtilité.]

1. The quality or the state of being subtile; thinness; fineness; exility; subtilness.

The subtilties of particular sounds. Bacon.

2. Over-refinement; too much acuteness.

There is a reason rendered full of infinite subtilty. Holland.

3. Cunning; craft; subtlety. — See SUBTLETY.

The rudeness and barbarity of savage Indians knows not so perfectly to hate all virtues as some men's subtlety. Eg. Ch.

4. † A cunning device or emblem. Leland.

SUB-TĒLE (sū't'l), a. [L. subtilis. — See SUBTILE.]

1. Sly; artful; cunning; crafty; wily.

The serpent, subtile beast of all the field. Milton.

2. Acute; keen; as, "A subtile reasoner."

3. † Very smooth, as a bowling green. Shak.

— "This word and subtle have been used almost indiscriminately to express very different senses, as may be seen in Johnson, but, as custom has adopted a different spelling and a different pronunciation, it is to be presumed it has not been without reason.
That the first sense of the word, meaning fine, acute, &c., should extend itself to the latter, meaning sly, artful, &c., is not to be wondered at, as words have a tendency to fall into a bad sense, witness knave, villain, &c., but, if custom has marked this difference of sense by a difference of spelling and pronunciation, it should seem to be an effort of nature to preserve precision in our ideas. If these observations are just, the abstracts of these words ought to be kept as distinct as their concretes: from subtle ought to be formed subtly, and from subtle, subtlety, the b being heard in the two first, and mute in the two last." Walker.

"Subtle is the proper spelling when we mean sly or cunning; the other spelling is proper when we mean thin or rare. Both forms have the same root." Smart.

Syn. — Subtle and subtle are often confounded with each other, both in orthography and pronunciation, and also in the sense of acute, as, a subtle reasoner or a subtle reasoner. But the orthography of subtle, in this sense, seems preferable. In the sense of sly, artful, wily, and cunning, subtle is the established orthography, and subtle, in the sense of thin, fine, and rare. — Subtle, as applied to the intellect and its operations, partakes somewhat of a bad sense; as, a subtle reasoner may be less candid and far than an acute reasoner. — See CUNNING, ACUTE.

SUB-TĒLE-NĒSS (sū't'l-nēs), n. The quality of being subtile; subtilty. Smart.

SUB-TĒLE-TY (sū't'l-tē), n. [L. subtilitas.]

cunning; slyness; craft; artifice.

As from his wit and native subtlety. Milton.

2. Acuteness or nicety of discrimination.

It is with subtlety that he has traced the origin of the word. Johnson.

SUB-TĒLY (sū't'lē), ad. In a subtile manner; slyly; artfully; cunningly; craftily; — nicely. Milton.

SUB-TŌN'IC, n. (Mus.) The semitone immedi-

SUB-TRĀCT', v. a. [L. subtrahō, subtractus; sub, under, and trahō, tractus, to draw; It. sottrarre;
Sp. sustraer; Fr. soustraire.] 1. SUBTRACTED;
pp. SUBTRACTING, SUBTRACTED.] To take away, as a part; to deduct; to withdraw.

Whatever time and attendance we bestow upon one thing we must necessarily subtract from another. Scott.

"They who derive it from the Latin write sub- tract; those who know the French original write substract, which is the common word." Dr. John- son. — "Substract, either in spelling or pronunciation, is a vulgarism." Smart. — "Both etymology and analogy, as well as euphony, determine us in preferring subtract to substract, and consequently subtraction to substraction." Dr. Campbell.

4. (Law.) A right to enter upon the estate, real or personal, which one deceased had at the time of his death,—the right by which one set of men may, by succeeding another set, acquire a property in all the goods, movables, and other chattels of a corporation. Burritt.

5. (Mus.) A term applied to the notes of melody, in contradistinction to those of harmony, which are given in combination. Moore.

Apostolical succession, (Theol.) the uninterrupted succession of priests in the church, by regular ordination, from the first commission given by Christ to the apostles, and recorded in the Gospels, down to the present day.

"The doctrine of 'the apostolical succession,' as it is properly called, means the belief that the clergy, so regularly ordained, have a commission from God to preach the gospel, administer the sacraments, and guide the church; that through their ministrations only we can derive the grace which is communicated by the sacraments. It follows, of course, that those sects of Christians which have no such succession (having seceded from Romanism without retaining ministers regularly ordained, or having subsequently interrupted the succession, that is, all Protestant bodies, except the Church of England) have, properly speaking, neither church nor sacraments, since they possess no apostolic authority. . . . The Church of England does not affirm this doctrine in her Articles, and the language of Art. 19, although not excluding it, is plainly not such as would have been used by framers who wished to inculcate it." Brande.

Syn.—See SERIES.

SUC-CES'SION-AL, a. Pertaining to, existing in, or implying succession. Shaftesbury.

SUC-CES'SION-AL-LY, ad. By succession. Ec. Rev.

I here declare you rightful successor And heir immediate to my crown. Dryden.

"This word is not unfrequently pronounced with the accent on the second syllable, as if it were formed from success; but this accentuation, though agreeable to its Latin original, has, as in confessor, yielded to the prevailing power of the English antepenultimate accent. Dr. Johnson, Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Elphinstone, and Entick accent this word on the first syllable, and Dr. Ash, Dr. Kenrick, W. Johnston, Mr. Perry, Buchanan, and Bailey, on the second; Barclay and Fennell give both, but prefer the first; Mr. Scott gives both, and prefers the second; but, from the opinion that is foolishly gone forth, that we ought to accent words as near the beginning as possible, there is little doubt that the antepenultimate accent will prevail." Walker.—"This is one of the words over which fashion now relaxes its sway in favor of the more consistent accentuation" (suc-cēs'sor). Smart.

SŪGAR (shúg'ar, 92), n. [Sansc. çarkara; Malay jagara; Arab & Per. sukhar; Slav. zakar.—Gr. σάκχαρ, σάκχαρι, σάκχαρον; L. saccharum; It. zucchero; Sp. azucar; Fr. sucre.—Dut. suiker; Ger. zucker; Dan. sukker; Sw. socker.—W. sugr; Ir. siar-ra.] A sweet substance obtained from many vegetable juices, but principally from the juice of the sugar-cane, by evaporating the water which it contains.

There are four principal varieties of sugar,—cane sugar, fruit sugar, grape sugar, and milk sugar. These varieties differ in external appearance, in chemical composition, and in chemical characters. —Cane sugar, sugar obtained chiefly from sugar cane (Saccharum officinarum), the sugar maple (Acer saccharinum), and beet-root, and contained in a great many other vegetables. It is extracted from the juice of these plants by evaporation and crystallization. It crystallizes, by the rapid cooling of a strong sirup, in small grains, as in loaf sugar, or, by a slow process, in large, four-sided, rhomboidal prisms, terminated by dihedral summits;—called also sucrose. —Fruit sugar, sugar existing ready-formed in honey and in most acidulous fruits, not crystallizable, and partially convertible into grape sugar by being boiled in dilute acids. It forms a sirupy liquid, and is very abundant in treacle,—called also fructose. —Grape sugar, sugar occurring in the juice of many plants, and constituting the crystals which form in honey; also a product of the metamorphosis of starch, cane sugar, ligneous fibre, sugar of milk, &c., when boiled with diluted acids. It also constitutes the hard, granular, sweet masses common in old dried fruits, such as raisins, figs, &c. It requires nearly two parts and a half of it to produce the same sweetening effect as is produced by one part of cane sugar. It crystallizes in cubes or square tables, and from hot alcohol in anhydrous prisms; — called also starch sugar, and glucose. — Milk sugar, sugar occurring only in the milk of animals, and having less sweetening power than grape sugar. It crystallizes in four-sided prisms, and is converted into grape sugar by boiling it with dilute acids, — called also sugar of milk, lactine, and lactose. — The plane of polarization of a ray of polarized light is rotated from left to right, but unequally, by solutions of cane sugar, grape sugar, and milk sugar, and from right to left by a solution of fruit sugar. Polarized light has been used as a test of the presence of sugar, and the degree of rotation to indicate the quantity, and even the quality, of the sugar present. — Diabetic sugar, sugar identical with glucose, or grape sugar, sometimes existing as a morbid constituent of the urines in cases of diabetes. Gregory. Miller. Pereira.

Sugar of lead, (Chem.) the acetate of lead, a sweet, white, poisonous salt. Miller.

SUG'AR (shûg'ar), v. a. [i. SUGARED; pp. SUGARING, SUGARED.] To impregnate, mix, or season with sugar, or as with sugar; to sweeten.

And sugared speeches whispered in mine ear. Parfacc.

SUG'AR (shûg'ar), a. Pertaining to, or made of, sugar. Scott.

SUG'AR-BÄ'KER (shûg'ar-), n. A manufacturer or refiner of sugar. Johnson.

SUG'AR-BEET (shûg'ar-), n. A species of beet from which sugar is obtained, particularly Beta alba, or Silesian beet. Simmonds.

SUG'AR-BËR-RY (shûg'ar-), n. A small or medium-sized tree bearing sweet and edible fruits; hackberry; Celtis occidentalis. Gray.

SUG'AR-BÖX (shûg'ar-), n. A box for containing sugar; — particularly a large wooden box in which sugar is exported. Simmonds.

† SUG'AR-CÄN'DI-ÄN, n. Sugar candy. Bp. Hall.

SUG'AR-CÄN'DY (shûg'ar-), n. Candy made of sugar; sugar candied or crystallized. Shak.

SUG'AR-CÄNE (shûg'ar-), n. (Bot.) A tropical, gramineous plant, from the expressed juice of which sugar is principally made; Saccharum officinarum. Gray.

☞ The sugar-cane is propagated by slips. It takes from twelve to sixteen months, according to the temperature, for it to arrive at maturity. Towards the flowering-season, the leaves fall off, and the stem acquires a straw-yellow color. Some planters cut the cane before the flowering-season, but most some weeks after. Tomlinson.

SUG'AR-HÖUSE (shûg'ar-), n. A house or building for preparing sugar from cane juice, or for refining sugar; a manufactory of sugar. Clarke.

SUG'AR-I-NËSS (shûg'ar-ä-näs), n. The state or the quality of being sugary. Clarke.

SUG'AR-Y (shûg'ar-ä), a. 1. Pertaining to, resembling, or containing sugar; sweet. Spenser.

2. Fond of sugar or of sweet things. "Sugary palates." Hist. of Royal Society.

SUG-ËS'CËNT, a. [L. sugo, sugens, to suck.] Pertaining to sucking. [R.] Paley.

|| SUG-GËST' (sug-jëst' or sug-jëst') [sug-jëst', W. P. J. F. R. C. Wb.; sug-jëst', S. E. Ja. K. Sm.], v. a. [L. suggero, suggestus; sub, under, and gero, to carry, to bring, It. suggerire, Sp. sugerir; Fr. suggerer.] 2. SUGGESTED; pp. SUGGESTING, S'GGSTED.

1. To hint, to intimate; to indicate; to prompt; to allude to; to insinuate.

Why dost thou, then, suggest to me distrust? Milton.

To nurse
The growing seeds of wisdom, that suggest,
By every pleasing image they present,
Reflections such as meliorate the heart.
Compose the passions, and exalt the mind. Cowper.

2. † To tempt; to seduce.
Tender youth is soon suggested. Shak.

3. † To inform secretly or privately.
We must suggest the people. Shak.

☞ "Though the first g in exaggerate is, by a carelessness of pronunciation, assimilated to the last, this is not always the case in the present word. For, though we sometimes hear it sounded as if written sud-jest, the most correct speakers generally preserve the first and last g in their distinct and separate sounds. Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, and Mr. Nares pronounce the g in both syllables soft, as if written sud-jest. Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Perry, and Barclay make the first g hard, and the second soft, as if written sug-jest, as I have done; for, as the accent is not on these consonants, there is not the same apology for pronouncing the first soft as there is in exaggerate." Walker.

Syn. — See INSINUATE.

|| SUG-GËST'ËR, n. One who suggests. Bp. Hall.

|| SUG-GËST'ION (sug-jëst'yun), n. [L. suggestio; It. suggestione; Sp. sugestion; Fr. suggestion.]

SUG-GIL-LÄ'TION, n. [L. suggillatio; Fr. suggillation.] (Med.) A livid, black, or yellow spot produced by blood effused into the areolar tissue from a contusion; — also a spontaneous effusion occurring as the result of disease, or after death. Dunghlson.

SÜ'I-CÏ DAL, a. Relating to suicide; partaking, or of the nature, of suicide. Brit. Crit.

SÜ'I-CÏ-DÄL-LY, ad. In a suicidal manner. Faber.

SÜ'I-CÏDE, n. [L. sui, of one's self, and cædo, to kill; It. & Sp. suicidio; Fr. suicide.]

1. The act of one who designedly kills himself; the voluntary taking away of one's own life; self-slaughter; self-murder; self-homicide.
The command, Thou shalt not kill, forbids suicide as well as homicide. Fleming.

2. One who deliberately and intentionally kills himself; one who commits self-slaughter.

☞ In law suicide is the deliberate and intentional destruction of one's self, by a person of years of discretion, and in his senses. . . . Self-slaughter by an insane man, or a lunatic, is not an act of suicide, within the meaning of the law. Burrill.

☞ Up to the middle of the seventeenth century our good writers use self-homicide, never suicide. The coming up of suicide is marked by this passage in Phillips' "New World of Words," 1671, 3d edition: "Nor less to be exploded is the word 'suicide,' which may as well seem to participate of sus, a sow, as of the pronoun sui." Trench.

SÜ-I-CÏD'I-CAL, a. Suicidal. [R.] Maunder.

SÜ'I-CÏ-DÏSM, n. The state or the quality of being suicidal or self-murdering. Clarke.

† SÜ'I-CÏSM, n. The act of a suist; the sin of a suist; selfishness. Whitlock.

SÜ'ING, n. The act of one who sues; a suit.

SÜ'ING-LY, ad. By suing. Sir T. More.

SÜIT (süt), n. [Fr. suite. — See SUE.]

1. † Pursuit; prosecution. Spenser.

2. † Consecution; sequence; order; course.

"The same kind and suit of weather." Bacon.

3. A number of things of the same kind following, correspondent, or suited to each other or used together; a set; as, "A suit of clothes or of armor." — See SET, and SUITE.

He hath his change of suits; yea, he spareth not to go in his silks and velvet. Wilson.

4. A retinue; a set. — See SUITE.

5. The act of suing; a petition; an entreaty; a request. "Grant or deny my suit." Chapman.

Many shall make suit unto thee. Job xi. 19.

6. Solicitation in marriage; courtship. Shak.

Rebate your loves, each rival suit suspend. Pope.

7. (Law.) In old English law, a following or attendance, — attendance by a tenant on his lord, especially at his court: — attendance for the purpose of performing some service, as to grind at a certain mill: — a number of persons produced by a plaintiff in court, simultaneously with making his count or declaration, for the purpose of confirming his allegations: — the retinue, chattels, offspring, and appurtenances of a villain. — In modern law, the prosecution of some claim or demand in a court of justice; judicial prosecution: — the formal method of pursuing and recovering one's right in a court of justice; an action; a case. Burrill.

☞ According to Lord Coke, the word suit includes an execution, but the word action does not; but they are constantly used as synonymous, and in every-day practice an action is constantly termed a suit. To sue is to commence an action; but even in this application, suit is the more general term of the two, embracing proceedings both at law and in equity. The expressions, "suit at law," "suit in equity," "law-suit," "chancery suit," are constantly employed; but the term action seems to be properly confined to law proceedings. "Action in equity" is an expression rarely or never used. Burrill.

Suit of cards, those cards of a pack which are of the same name or denomination, as of hearts, diamonds, &c. — To follow suit, to play a card of the same suit: — to do as another does. — Out of suits, having no correspondence. "Out of suits with fortune." Shak.

Syn. — See CASE, PRAYER.

SÜIT (süt), v. a. [i. SÜITED; pp. SÜITING, SÜITED.]

1. To fit; to adapt; to adjust; to make to correspond. "Suit the action to the word." Shak.

2. To be fitted or adapted to; to become.

SÛL'PHU-RËT-TËD, a. (Chem.) Holding or having sulphur in combination. P. Cye.

Sulphuretted hydrogen, a colorless gas consisting of one equivalent of sulphur and one of oxygen; hydrosulphuric acid; hepatic air. It has a very disagreeable taste, and a nauseous, fetid odor resembling that of putrid eggs; sulphydric acid. P. Cye.

SÛL'PHU'RIC (122) [sül'fur'ik, C. B. Cl. Dunghison; sül'fur'ik, W. Maunder; sül'fur'ik, Sm.], a. Relating to, or derived from, sulphur.

Sulphuric acid, (Chem.) an acid composed of one equivalent of sulphur and three equivalents of oxygen; — called also oil of vitriol and nitrolic acid. — Sulphuric ether, a limpid, colorless, transparent, very volatile, and extremely inflammable liquid; of a powerful, penetrating, and peculiar odor; of a taste, at first fiery, then cooling; producing, if taken internally, stimulating and intoxicating effects, and, if its vapor is inhaled, exhalation, speedily followed by temporary complete insensibility to pain, boiling at 94° 8 F., and freezing at about 24° below zero; possessing high retracting power; prepared by distilling equal measures of alcohol and sulphuric acid; and consisting of two equivalents of ethyl and two of oxygen, or of eight equivalents of carbon, ten of hydrogen, and two of oxygen; — called also ethylic or vine ether. If its vapor is inhaled, pure and duly mixed with atmospheric air, it is capable of surely and safely rendering the severest surgical operations painless. It was first successfully applied for this purpose at Boston, Mass., in 1846, under the instructions of Charles T. Jackson, M. D. — the discoverer of its anæsthetic properties, — by W. T. G. Morton, a dentist; and since that period it has been extensively used in surgical practice, and has proved to be of inestimable value. Miller. Academy of Sciences of France. Whewell. E. Everett.

SUM, n. [L. summa; It. somma; Sp. suma; Fr. somme.—Dut. som; Ger. summe; Dan. sum; Sw. summa.—Gael. suim; W. sum.—From L. sumo, to take. Scaliger.—From L. summus, from superus, upper; super, above. IV. Smith.—Probably from A. S. summan, sammian, to collect. Richardson.]

1. The aggregate of two or more numbers, quantities, magnitudes, individuals, or particulars; amount; as, "The sum of 9 and 8 is 17."

How precious also are thy thoughts unto me, O God! how great is the sum of them! Ps. cxxxix. 17.

The sum of duty let two words contain,
Be humble, and be just. Prior.

4. Height; completion; summit.

The sum of earthly bliss. Milton.

5. (Arith.) A question or problem. Dickens.

This sense of sum is common both in this country and in England, though it appears not to be given in any English Dictionary, except that of Clarke. Sum is defined, "a question in arithmetic" by Jennings in his "Glossary of the Dialect of the West of England," and by Halliwell in his "Dictionary of Archaic and Provincial Words;" and he notes it as thus used in various dialects. Forby, in his "Vocabulary of East Anglia," says, "We have summing-schools, summing-books, and summing-masters, and solving any question in arithmetic is doing a sum."

There are whole passages in his [Aristotle's] writings in which he appears like a school boy who knows the answer to a sum, but cannot get the figures to come to it.

W. Bagehot, Nat. Rev., London, 1858.

How is it then, that we ever reach a wrong conclusion? It may be done by using a calculus in the process, and using it wrongly, as we may perform a sum wrongly in arithmetic, and so get a wrong conclusion. B. H. Smart.

SUM, v. a. [It. sommare; Sp. sumar; Fr. sommer.—A. S. summan, sammian, to assemble, to collect.] [i. SUMMED; pp. SUMMING, SUMMED.]

SŪ-PĒR-STĪ'TION (sū-pēr-stish'un), n. [L. superstitio; superstes, one who stands by; super, over, above, and sto, to stand; It. superstizione; Sp. superstición; Fr. superstition.] — It is difficult to connect the meaning of this word with its derivation from superstes. Perhaps the force of the word lies in the prefix, the root having little more than the meaning of the substantive verb. If so, the etymological signification is "A being excessive, excess"; hence, in particular, excess in religion. W. Smith.

1. The form which religion takes when the mind worships a false object instead of the true one: — excess of scruple or ceremony in matters of religion: — observance of unnecessary and uncommanded rites or practices: — rites and practices proceeding from devotion to a false object of worship.

Superstition of an undue object is that which the etymologist calls τὴν εἰδωλὴν αἰδωμένην, the worshipping of idols. Bp. Taylor.

A religion that consisted in absurd superstitions. Law.

2. A belief in the existence of particular facts or phenomena, produced by supernatural agency, of which the existence is not proved by experience or countenanced by revelation; a belief in the direct agency of supernatural power in producing results which can either be proved to proceed from secondary causes, or by reasonable analogy must be inferred so to proceed, as a belief that epileptic fits are produced by witchcraft.

Perhaps some men will much less to be detected than in the actions of the world, and the world will be the more easily deceived by the actions of the world. It. Dali.

3. A false or vain worshipping; false religion. They had certain questions against him of their own superstition. Acts xxv. 19.

4. Any excessive scruple; over-nicety; exactness too scrupulous. Johnson.

Syn. — Superstition is a term used in both an objective and a subjective sense. In the objective sense, it is used to denote a false religion, worship, tenet, or observance; as idolatry and all forms of pagan worship are regarded as superstitions. In the subjective sense, it means a habit of ascribing to the direct or special agency of supernatural powers results which can be proved to proceed from the ordinary course of nature. This may be called a weak credulity; and it is more allied to bigotry, which springs from an ill-informed, narrow, or prejudiced mind, than to fanaticism, which implies a highly excited state of mind.

SŪ-PĒR-STĪ'TIOUS (-stish'us), a. [L. superstitiosus; It. superstizioso; Sp. supersticioso; Fr. superstitieux.]

SŪR'NĀME, n. [L. super, above, and nomen, name; It. soprannome; Sp. sobrenombre; Fr. surnom.]

1. The family name of an individual; the name which one has over and above the Christian name, or that given in baptism.

There was a period when only a few had surnames, — only a few, that is, had any significance or importance in the order of things temporal, — while the Christian name, from the first, was common to every man. Locke

2. An appellation added to the original name. "My surname Coriolanus." Shak.

3. "Until about the middle of the last century this word was sometimes written surname. Whether this variation originated in the lax orthography of other times, or whether it was adopted to express a slight difference of meaning, I will not undertake to decide. Some writers have held the latter opinion, and defined surname as 'nomen patris additum proprio,' and surname as 'nomen supra nomen additum.' MacAllan, Fitzherbert, Ap Evan, and Stephenson would accordingly be sur or 'sire'-names, equivalent to the son of Allan, of Herbert, of Evan, and of Stephen. Of surnames, Du Gange says, they were at first written, 'not in a direct line after the Christian name, but above it, between the lines,' and hence they were called in Latin supranomina, in Italian soprannomi, and in French surnoms, — 'over-names.' Those who contend for the non-identity of the two words, assert that although every sur-name is a sur-name, every sur-name is not a sur-name." M. A. Lower.

SUR-NĀME, v. a. [Fr. surnommer.] [i. SURNAMED; pp. SURNAMING, SURNAMED.] To name or distinguish by an appellation added to the original name.

The Report of the Superintendent of the U. S. Coast Survey.

Trigonometrical survey, a survey on a large scale, as for making a geometrical map of a country, or for measuring an arc of the terrestrial meridian. Brande.

“This substantive was, till within these few years, universally pronounced with the accent on the last syllable, like the verb; but, since Johnson and Lowth led the way, a very laudable desire of regulating and improving our language has given the substantive the accent on the first syllable, according to a very general rule in the language; but this has produced an anomaly in pronunciation, for which, in my opinion, the accentual distinction of the noun and verb does not make amends: if we place the accent on the first syllable of the noun, the ey in the last must necessarily be pronounced like ey in barley, attorney, journey, &c. Notwithstanding, therefore, this accentuation has numbers to support it, I think it but a short-sighted emendation, and not worth adopting. All our orthoepists pronounce the verb with the accent on the last, except Fenning, who accents the first. Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, Mr. Nares, Dr. Ash, Perry, and Entick (and Todd) accent the first syllable of the noun; but Dr. Johnson and Bailey, the original lexicographers, accent the last.” Walker.

Syn.—See PROSPECT, RETROSPECT.

SUR-VEY'AL (sur-vā'al), n. Survey. Barrow.

†SUR-VEY'ANCE (-vā'-), n. Survey. Chaucer.

 †SYC'A-MÏNE, n. [Gr. συκάμινος.] The mulberry.
 If ye had faith as a grain of mustard-seed, ye might say unto this sycamore tree, Be thou plucked up by the root, and be thou planted in the sea. Luke. xvi. 9.
 It is probably the Morus nigra of Linnaeus, but has been confounded by modern and ancient writers with the sycamore, Ficus sycomorus. W. Smith. Killo.
 SYC'A-MÖRE, n. [Heb. תְּמָר; Gr. συκάμωρος, the fig-mulberry; σίκον, a fig, and μόρον, the black mulberry.] (Bot.)

1. A species of fig-tree, having wide-spreading branches, found in Palestine, Egypt, &c.; Ficus sycamorus. Baird.

2. The Ficus sycamorus is probably the sycamore tree of the Bible. Baird.

3. A tree of the genus Platanus; plane-tree.

Some say the sycamore of the ancients is the Platanus Orientalis, or Oriental plane; and in Scotland, from the resemblance of the leaves of this species to that tree, it is often called the sycamore. The American plane or sycamore is the Platanus Occidentalis;—called also button-wood, water-beech, plane-tree, and, in Canada, cotton-tree. Baird. Gray. Loudon.

4. A species of maple the timber of which is used by turners, millwrights, &c.; Acer pseudo-platanus. Loudon. Baird.

1. The behavior of an informer. Bp. Hall.

2. The behavior of a sycophant; the practice of a flatterer; mean flattery or servility. Knob.

SÝC'Q-PHÂNT (sik'-o-fânt), n. [Gr. συκοφάντης, one who informed against persons exporting figs from Attica, or plundering sacred fig-trees, a common informer, a slanderer; σίκον, a fig, and φαίνω, to show; L. sycophanta, an informer, a flatterer; It. sicofante; Fr. sycophante.]

1. An informer; a false accuser.

The poor man that hath nought to lose, is not afraid of the sycophant. Holland.

2. A base parasite; one who flatters meanly or obsequiously; a mean flatterer.

A sycophant will every thing admire. Dryden.

The literal signification is not found in any ancient writer, and may be altogether an invention. Liddell & Scott.—The Greek scholiasts invented the story to explain a word of which they knew nothing, namely, that the sycophant was a manifestor of figs, one who exposed others in the act of exporting figs from Attica, an act forbidden, they asserted, by the Athenian law. Be this explanation worth what it may, the word obtained in Greek a more general sense; any accuser, and then any false accuser, was a sycophant; and when the word was adopted into the English language it was in this meaning. Trench.

Syn.—See FLATTERER.

†SÝC'Q-PHÂNT, v. n. [Gr. συκοφαντέω.] To play the sycophant. Gov. of the Tongue.

†SÝC'Q-PHÂNT, v. a. To calumniate. Milton.

1. Any thing cognizable by the senses that represents something moral or intellectual; an emblem; a type; a sign; a token.

Salt, as incorruptible, was the symbol of friendship. Brown.

Words are the signs and symbols of things. South.

2. Symbol is a general term embracing all the varieties of hieroglyphics, types, enigmas, emblems, &c. The cross was the most noted of all the Christian symbols. The Trinity was frequently represented by a triangle with a circle, and the mortality of man by a skull and cross bones. Britton.

3. (Ecol.) A creed or formula of religious belief; an abstract or compendium.

The symbol of our faith. Baker.

4. It seems that creeds were termed symbols by early ecclesiastical writers, either because (as Augus-time says) all the fundamental doctrines of Christianity are collected in them, or from the traditional story related by Rufinus, that the creed called the Apostles' Creed was formed by each of them contributing a sentence. Brande.

3. A memorial; a memento. [R.] Spenser.

4. A mark or character used as an abbreviation, or to represent any thing. P. Cyc.

5. † A contribution to a common stock.

Happy are they who put in the greatest symbol. Bp. Taylor.

6. † Lot; sentence of adjudication. Taylor.

Syn. — See FIGURE.

Chemical symbols, abbreviations for expressing the chemical composition of bodies, consisting of the initial letters of the Latin names of elementary substances, with an additional letter when the names of two or more substances begin with the same letter, figures or dots indicating the number of equivalents, certain algebraic signs, &c. Thus the formula $KO, 2CrO_2$ denotes a compound of two equivalents of chromic acid and one of potash, or bichromate of potash; CrO_3 , denoting a compound of one equivalent of chromium and three of oxygen, or chromic acid, and KO denoting a compound of one equivalent of potassium (Kalium) and one of oxygen, or potash. Miller.

SYM-MÊT'RĪ-CAL, a. [It. simmetrico; Sp. simétrico; Fr. symétrique.]

1. Having symmetry; having the parts in due proportion; proportionate; proportional.

A symmetrical assemblage of beautiful features. Chesterfield.

2. (Bot.) Noting flowers which have an equal number of parts of each sort, or in each set or circle of organs. Gray.

Symmetrical solids, (Geom.) two solids, such that when they are placed on two sides of the same plane, for every point in the surface of the one, there is a corresponding point in the surface of the other, in the same perpendicular to the plane, and at the same distance from it. The solids, when so placed, are said to be symmetrically situated with regard to the plane. They have equal solid contents, but do not coincide by superposition. Lib. of Useful Knowledge.

A curve is symmetrical with respect to a straight line when its points, taken in pairs, are symmetrically disposed with respect to it. — In analysis, an expression is symmetrical with respect to two letters when the places of those two letters may be changed without changing the expression. Da. & P.

SYM-MÊT'RĪ-CAL-LY, ad. In a symmetrical manner; with due proportion of parts. Burrill.

Two points are symmetrically disposed with respect to a straight line when they are on opposite sides of the line, and equally distant from it, so that a straight line joining them intersects the given line, and is at right angles to it. Davies.

SYM-MÊT'RĪ-CAL-NÉSS, n. The state of being symmetrical; proportion of parts. Clarke.

SYM-MÊ-TRĪ'CIAN (sím-ê-trish'un), n. A symmetrist; a symmetrist. Holinshead.

SYM'MÊ-TRIST, n. A symmetrist. Wotton.

SYM'MÊ-TRIZE, v. a. To make symmetrical; to reduce to symmetry. Burke.

SYM'MÊ-TRY, n. [Gr. συμμετρία; σύν, with, together, and μέτρον, measure; L. symmetria; It. simmetria; Sp. simetria; Fr. symétrie.] Agreement of one part with another, or with the whole; adaptation of parts to each other or to the whole; proportion; harmony.

The fine and delicate symmetry and use of every part, in the construction of a vessel. Waterland.

Syn. — Symmetry and proportion both signify a due adjustment or adaptation of parts to each other, or to the whole; but proportion is of more extensive application, being applied to every thing which admits of dimensions and adaptation of parts. Proportion of limbs, of the head to the body, of all the parts; symmetry of features; harmony of parts.

2. Having sympathy; feeling with, or for, another or others; compassionate; tender.

Your sympathetic heart she hopes to move. Prior.

3. (Med.) Noting an affection that supervenes without any morbid cause acting directly on the organ, but by the reaction of some other organ primarily affected. Dunglison.

Itching of the nose is a sympathetic affection, produced by irritation in the intestinal canal. Dunglison.

Sympathetic ink, a kind of ink, as the aqueous solution of chloride of cobalt, with which characters may be traced on paper that are invisible when cold, but become visible by exposure to heat, and again fade, when cooled, by absorbing moisture from the air. Miller. — Sympathetic powder, a powder once supposed to cure a wound, if applied to the weapon that inflicted it, or even to a portion of the bloody clothes. Dunglison. — Sympathetic sounds, sounds produced by the vibrations excited in solid bodies, as cords, by the vibrations of other solid bodies propagated through the air. Young.

SYM'PA-THIST, n. One who feels sympathy; a sympathizing person; a sympathizer. Coleridge.

SYM'PA-THIZE, v. n. [Gr. συμπάσσω; It. simpatizzare; Sp. simpatizar; Fr. sympathiser. — See SYMPATHY.] [i. SYMPATHIZED; pp. SYMPATHIZING, SYMPATHIZED.]

1. To feel with another, or in consequence of what another feels; to have or feel sympathy; to have common or mutual feeling.

Their countrymen were particularly attentive to all their story, and sympathized with their heroes in all their adventures. Addison.

Who, when he reads a city stormed, forbears
To feel her woes and sympathize in tears. Pitt.

2. † To agree; to fit; to harmonize.

Blue and yellow are two colors which sympathize. Dryden.

†SYM'PA-THIZE, v. a. To suffer for in common.

By this sympathized one day's error. Shak.

SYM'PA-THIZ-ER, n. One who sympathizes.

SYM'PA-THY, n. [Gr. συμπάθεια, from σύν, with, and πάθος, passion, feeling; L. sympathia; It. & Sp. simpatia; Fr. sympathie.]

1. Fellow-feeling; mutual sensibility; the quality of being affected by another's affection; — compassion; commiseration; condolence; pity; tenderness.

There is a kind of sympathy in souls which fits them for each other. Steele.

Sympathy is one main engine by which the orator operates on the passions. Dr. Campbell.

Sympathy . . . an inward feeling which is excited by the particular and extraordinary situation of another. Cogan.

2. An agreement of affections, likings, tastes, temperaments, pleasures, sufferings, &c.

You are not young; no more am I; go to, then, there's sympathy. You are merry; so am I: hal! hal! then there's sympathy. You love sack, and so do I: would you de-

Shak.

Sympathy in years, manners, and beauties. Shak.

3. Correspondence; correlation; preestablished harmony; mutual adaptation; reciprocity; affinity; concert; union.

There is in souls a sympathy with sounds. Couper.

4. (Med.) The correspondence of affections or sensations between different parts or organs of the body, so that an affection of one is transmitted, secondarily, to the others, or to one of the others; the suffering together of parts.

A knowledge of the particular sympathies between different organs throws light on the etiology of diseases, their seat, and the proper remedies towards which our therapeutical efforts should be directed. Dunglison.

5. (Fine Arts.) Mutual conformity of parts; effective union or harmony of colors. Brande.

Sympathy of clocks, a name applied to the phenomenon of two clocks which rest on the same support, modifying each other's motions, so as to exhibit a perfect coincidence in all of them. Young.

Syn. — See FIT.

SYM-PÊT'SIS, n. [Gr. σύν, with, and πέσσω, to ripen, to digest.] (Med.) Coction. Dunglison.

SYM'PHŌ-NY (sím'fŏ-ne), n. [Gr. συμφωνία; σύν, with, and φωνή, the voice; L. symphonia; It. & Sp. sinfonia; Fr. symphonie.] (Mus.)

1. An elaborate composition for a complete instrumental orchestra, usually consisting of four, or at the least three, distinct movements; — first, an allegro, or quick movement, in sonata form, sometimes opening with a brief introduction in slow time; second, a slow movement, as andante, largo, or adagio, in which a theme is varied; third, a minuet, with its trio, or, in modern usage, a scherzo; lastly, a finale in rapid time, written in the rondo form. Dwight.

The term symphony is also applied to large orchestral compositions in a freer style, sometimes with voices, as descriptive or programme symphonies, ode symphonies, &c. Dwight.

2. A comparatively short introductory, intermediate, or concluding instrumental passage in a vocal composition. Warner.

3. An ancient musical instrument, supposed to have been of the drum kind. Dwight.

4. Anciently, a vocal composition, or a composition vocal and instrumental. Warner.

5. A concordance of tones; a concert of voices or instruments; a harmony of mingled sounds; consonance; concert; consent; harmony.

A learned searcher from Pythagoras's school, where it was a maxim that the images of all things are latent in numbers, determines the closest proportion between breadths and heights, reducing symmetry to symphony, and the harmony of sound to a kind of harmony in sight. Wotton.

And let the base of heaven's deep organ blow,
And, with your ninefold harmony,
Make up full consort to the angelic symphony. Milton.

SYM-PHYS'É-AL, a. (Med.) Of, or pertaining to, symphysis. Smart.

SYM-PHYS'É-ŌT'Q-MY, } n. [Gr. σφύραις, sym-

SYM-PHYS'ŌT'Q-MY, } physis, and τέμνω, to cut.] (Surg.) The operation of dividing the symphysis; the Sigaulian operation. Dunglison.

SYM'PHY-SIS, n. [Gr. σφύραις; σύν, with, and φύω, to grow.] (Anat.) A union of bones, or the bond of such union: — union of parts previously separated; coalescence: — point of union between two parts; commissure: — attachment of one part to another; insertion. Dunglison.

SYM-PI-Ê-SŌM'Ê-TÊR, n. [Gr. συμπίεζω, to compress, and μέτρον, a measure.] A very sensitive instrument for indicating the amount and variations of atmospheric pressure by its effect in compressing a column of an elastic gas enclosed in a tube.

The sympiesometer consists of a vertical glass tube terminated above by an oblong bulb, and bent upwards at its lower extremity, and expanding into a cistern open at top. The bulb and upper part of the tube contain hydrogen gas; the lower part and the cistern contain colored oil of almonds. As the pressure of the atmosphere varies, the enclosed hydrogen expands or contracts by proportional but large quantities, and the liquid accordingly either rises or falls in the tube, through large spaces. A scale is attached, so graduated that the indications of the instrument corrected for temperature (as observed by a thermometer not represented in the figure) correspond with those of a mercurial barometer. The sensitiveness of this instrument renders it valuable at sea, but for delicate meteorological researches it is inferior to the mercurial barometer, in consequence, chiefly, of the absorption of the hydrogen gas by the oil. Adie. Nichol.

SYM'PLE-SITE, n. (Min.) A mineral, commonly of a pale indigo color, and supposed to be an arseniate of the protoxide of iron. Dana.

SYM'PLO-CÉ, n. [Gr. συμπλοκή; σύν, with, and πλοκή, a twining or knitting.] (Rhet.) A figure according to which several sentences or clauses have the same beginning and ending. Crabb.

J.*], a. [Gr. συμποσιακός; συμπίσιον, a drinking-party; L. symposiacus; Fr. symposiaque.] Relating to a symposium or compositation; relating to merry-makings; convivial; festive. The ancient custom of symposiac meetings. Brownie.

SYM-PÓ'SI-ÁC, n. A convivial meeting and conversation, as of philosophers. Chambers.

SYM-PÓ'SI-ÁRCH, n. [Gr. συμποσιάρχος; συμπίσιον, a banquet, and ἀρχω, to preside over.] The ruler or master of a symposium, or feast. As Alexander and Cæsar were born for conquest, so was Johnson for the office of a symposiarch, to preside in all conversations. St. J. Hawks.

SYM-PÓ'SI-ÁST, n. One who drinks or makes merry with another. Qu. Rev.

SYM-PÓ'SI-ÚM (sim-pó'se-úm or sim-pó'she-úm), n. [L., from Gr. συμπίσιον; συμπίσιον, to drink together; σύν, with, and πινω, to drink.] A drinking together; a merry-making; a feast; a banquet. "This polite symposium." Warton.

SÝMP'TOM (sim'tóm), n. [Gr. συμπτωμα, an accident, a symptom; συμπίπτω, to fall together; to befall; σύν, together, with, and πίπτω, to fall; It. & Sp. sintoma; Fr. symptôme.]

1. Something which happens concurrently with something else, by which the presence of the latter is indicated; an attendant phenomenon; an indication; a sign; a mark; a token. It has become almost fashionable to stigmatize such sentiments as no better than empty declamation; but it is an ill symptom, and peculiar to modern times. Cowper.

2. (Med.) Any change perceptible to the senses, which is connected with morbid influence; any thing which indicates the state of health or of disease. It is by the aggregate and succession of symptoms that a disease is detected. The term "symptoms of symptoms" has been used for the effects which result from the symptoms of a disease, but which effects are not essentially connected with the disease itself. Dunglison.

SÝN. — See MARK.

SÝMP-TQ-MÁT'IC (sim-tq-mát'ik), a. [Gr. συμπτωμاتیκός; συμπτωμاتیκα; It. & Sp. sintomatico; Fr. symptomatique.]
